

Roosevelt Denies U. S. Convoy Plan; Lease Bill Too Drastic—Kennedy

President Calls Idea Cow-Jumped-Over-Moon Stuff, Tries to Calm Fears

By George Bookman
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday stepped into the argument over his aid-to-Britain bill with a firm statement ruling out use of American naval vessels to convoy supplies to England.

In an attempt to set at rest fears that have been voiced during hearings on Capitol Hill, the President told his first press conference since the third-term inaugural that the convoy suggestions are cow-jumped-over-the-moon stuff.

Referring to these reports contemptuously as Mother Hubbard stuff, the President said he had never even considered conveying supplies for Britain.

In answer to a question, however, Mr. Roosevelt said he probably had the power to order the Navy into convoy duty right now, if he wished.

The President also threw cold water on suggestions that the United States convoy ships half way across the Atlantic to some relay point, such as Iceland, where British naval vessels would take over.

President Is Jocular

He was jocular about this latter suggestion, saying it was a new one on him, and asking facetiously, how about convoys to the Falkland Islands?

Meanwhile, sources of high security explained the Administration attitude toward the convoy suggestions in this manner:

If one nation conveys ships, either under its own or another flag, there is apt to be some shooting.

Shooting comes awfully close to war, the same sources said.

It was explained further that about the last thing the Administration had in mind was to do anything to cause shooting to start.

Mounting British ship losses in sea warfare with Germany have led to suggestions that the United States take over part of the conveying job.

Fish-Peels Fleet Purchase
Britain has been losing not only merchant vessels, but destroyers, ideal for convoy work.

The 50 destroyers transferred to Britain last fall by the President in exchange for New World bases have been of great help, but there is still need for more British naval protection.

In this connection, President Roosevelt was asked yesterday whether he had plans to transfer or sell part of the fleet to Britain. He

Blast, Film Fire Drive 300 Out Of D. C. Theater

Explosion and fire in the projection booth drove nearly 300 patrons from the Little Theater, 608 Ninth Street Northwest, at 9 o'clock last night at the last showing of "Pastor Hall," a moving picture distributed by James Roosevelt picturing a clergyman's fight against Hitler.

Flames shot from the fireproof booth after the blast, which was believed to have been set off by static electric sparks striking the film.

Thomas Leonard, 31, of 1449 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, and Charles Weidman, Jr., 28, of 413 Thirteenth Place Northeast, the operators, escaped injury. Melvin Parent, 31, 633 Park Road Northwest, an usher, and Harry Houser, 22, of 3039 Q Street Northwest, cautioned patrons to leave quickly. There was no disorder, they said.

Reynolds Not Sure He'll Take Job as 'Mayor'

Will Decide Soon; Problems of Defense Restrict Time, He Says

Senator Robert R. Reynolds (Democrat), North Carolina, may become the fifth Senator in a row to reject the job of Senate District Committee chairman, it was learned last night.

Senator Reynolds, from his bed in Naval Hospital, where he is confined with the flu, issued a statement saying that he had "taken under consideration" his appointment to the District Committee chairmanship. The Senate ratified the choice earlier and also approved assignment of Senator Harold R. Burton, of Ohio, former Mayor of Cleveland, to fill the Republican vacancy on the District Committee.

Reynolds said that while he had decided to accept the District job when it was first offered, the pressure of other committee work may now force him to decline.

He added that regardless of other interests, he was giving the job "thorough consideration" and would make a final decision soon "so that someone else might be named" if he finds he cannot accept the assignment.

Next in succession among the Democratic members of the committee, if Reynolds refuses, the chairmanship would be Senator Bilbo, of Mississippi. The job has already been turned down by Senators Glass, of Virginia; Tydings,

An Iowan Confesses

Farmer Henry Has Hard Time Learning Three R's of a V. P.

Henry Wallace last night told a group of neighbors from back Iowa way that he had a "tough time" in school yesterday, studying the three R's of his new job.

He went up to the Capitol, expecting to grab the gavel first thing, he explained to the Iowa State Society, which feted him last night at the Shoreham Hotel. But he found himself, by surprise, in the "Bureau of Education," boning up on rules, rostrum-running and repartee.

It wasn't Vice President Wallace, but Farmer Henry, uncomfortable in evening dress, who explained that the Bureau of Education could be found in a little basement office beneath the Senate Chamber.

Rules were the hardest chore, he said, so he studied them "not too much, but a little bit," deciding

Retiring Envoy Opposes Grant Of New Powers To Chief Executive

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Joseph P. Kennedy yesterday asked Congress to check any drastic grant of power at this time to the President but urged aid short of war to Great Britain to give America "precious time."

Through day-long questioning, the retiring Ambassador held firmly to his position. This Nation, he said, should arm with all haste, production rather than legislation was the problem. Only if it produces the guns and planes and tanks could it help England or itself.

Aid to Great Britain should be considered solely in terms of "what's best for us." And through his testimony rang one constant refrain: America should stay out of the war. It is performing "unneutral" acts. But it is "crazy" to say the President wants to get into the war.

The man who stayed in London as this Nation's representative through England's severest war trials said he was opposed to the "all out" aid bill in its present form but would support any action taken by Congress. That action, he suggested, should preserve the coordinate powers of the legislative branch.

"We Better Hurry Up"

A less drastic bill, he said, would do the job and at the same time help unify the country. That, he said, was important.

The question now seems to be: We can't all around and fiddle," he went on. "The real problem is that they need the stuff, they are not getting it, and we better hurry up and get it for them."

As the House Foreign Affairs Committee hearings closed for the day, Representative Fish, of New York, ranking Republican member, said he would introduce today a substitute bill to carry out the gist of Kennedy's advice.

The Fish substitute will authorize the administrator of the Federal Loan Agency, Jesse Jones, to lend, lease or otherwise provide not more than $2,000,000,000 for the British government to purchase supplies. Sums would be advanced "on the best security obtainable," and when that was exhausted, the aid could go on without collateral.

Opposes Bill in Present Form

Kennedy told Fish his proposal "sounds rather nice" but did not commit himself to support of it. He said it was something "you people" would have to work out.

Fish later outlined the substitute in a radio address. In effect, it was like the plan for a Government corporation to administer aid that the Administration originally considered.

Kennedy flatly committed himself against the pending lend-lease bill as the committee resumed session after luncheon recess.

"Are you for or against this bill?" asked Representative Chipberger (Republican), of Illinois.

"I'm against this bill in its present form," Kennedy replied.

The retiring Ambassador declined to recommend specific amendments. But with several proposals by individual members he agreed, notably with suggestions for limiting the total amount of aid, the life of the

U. S. 'Moral Embargo' on Russia Lifted

Ban on Warplane Exports Rescinded In Effort to Remove 'Points of Irritation'

The United States moved further last night to improve American-Russian relations by announcing removal of the "moral embargo" against shipments of warplanes and plane equipment to the Soviet.

The State Department made public a letter from Undersecretary Welles to Constantine A. Oumansky, the Russian Ambassador, saying:

"Following our recent conversation, I am happy to inform you that the Government of the United States of America has decided that the policies set forth in the statement to the press issued by the President on December 2, 1939, and generally referred to as the 'moral embargo,' are no longer applicable to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

"This decision is being communicated to interested American manufacturers and exporters."

To Relieve Irritation

The action was said in authoritative quarters to constitute nothing more than a continuation of mutual efforts to remove points of irritation that have arisen in dealings between the two countries, and to have no particular significance in the broad international relationships of the present.

Nevertheless, the State Department's step served to intensify interest in the question of Russian cooperation with Germany in the latter's efforts to alleviate effects of the British blockade, a cooperation that has received much consideration in chancelleries around the world. British and American desires for friendlier relations with Moscow, in the face of the European and Far Eastern situations, have been made manifest.

American efforts toward bettering of relations have led to a long series of conferences between Undersecretary Welles and Ambassador Oumansky. One result of the conferences has been release to Russia of a large part of an order of machine tools urgently requested by Russia but held up here while the United States' own defense needs were scrutinized.

Ban Was Felt Keenly

Russia is said to have felt keenly the "moral embargo" on plane products. Its removal appeared to have marked a considerable step in revival of friendly intercourse.

The materials covered by the informal embargo now have been placed under the licensing system of export control. Whether the lifting of the embargo indicated a more liberal attitude in licensing of exports of those materials to Russia was not indicated, but it was recognized that present demands on plane production facilities here would make such a possibility remote.

The embargo was imposed December 2, 1939, while Russia was fighting Finland and a wave of resentment was sweeping over an America sympathetic toward the Finns.

Schulte Suddenly Cancels Safety Meeting for Today

By Howard F. Wentworth
Post Staff Writer

Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, chairman of the Traffic Subcommittee of the House District Committee, yesterday cancelled suddenly a meeting scheduled for today with the Police Court judges and other city officials to discuss ways and means of curbing motor accidents.

He said he "hadn't had time to get them together." But when the conference was set for today at a meeting last week in his office, Schulte demanded "immediate action to drive death from the streets of the District of Columbia."

He branded the four Police Court judges as the "weakest link" in Washington's traffic control setup and assured authorities the meeting would be held today for a round-table exchange of ideas and recommendations.

Last night those on Schulte's list of invitations to the scheduled conference had not been notified of the British Crack Tobruk Defenses; Rumania Given 24 Hours To Subside or Face 'Tyranny'

Antonescu Pleads For Unity as Army, Iron Guards Fight And Riots Spread

By the Associated Press

Bucharest (Wednesday), Jan. 22.—Widespread disorders in Rumania including the slaying of a German officer prompted Gen. Ion Antonescu to put the army in charge of the state police, militarize 87 important industries, and make a desperate appeal last night to dissident Iron Guards to "forget the hatreds" and aid him in reestablishing order.

"We must," said Gen. Antonescu in appealing to the people, "reestablish order and tranquility in 24 hours because I have not been, and do not want to be tomorrow, the instrument of tyranny or the bridge leading to anarchy."

"I trust the honor of the country and the security of its frontier, the loyalty of the army officers, the fidelity of the soldiers, and true Iron Guards brought up in the spirit of love for their country taught by Codreanu," the premier-general said.

"I have accepted an overwhelming burden of leadership in order to prevent the downfall of the country and save the honor of the nation in its most crucial hour of trial."

Months of Turmoil

"I have fought without halt to save what could be saved. I swear before God, the nation and history, that these four months (since Antonescu took control from abdicated King Carol) have been months of the most bitter, most horrible, most devastating turmoil that a man could live through for his country. Some misunderstanding individuals, rebellious elements and foreign agents are now trying to disturb the order without which a state cannot live."

(Dispatches from Belgrade said fighting between heavily-armed Iron Guards and the Rumanian army was spreading to many parts of the country.)

(In Bucharest, Iron Guard sympathizers protesting Antonescu's edicts charged an army formation led by two tanks. The crowd advanced upon the tanks with pickaxes and attempted to disable their caterpillar treads by throwing blankets into their mechanisms. The tanks opened fire and killed two demonstrators.)

Interior Chief Dismissed

(From Sofia) it was reported German troops were speeding to Bucharest and other cities to quell the fighting.)

Gen. Antonescu dismissed Minister of the Interior Petrescu, a leading Iron Guard, "for failure to set up sentries around the hotel housing the German military mission, failure to take the necessary steps after the murder of the German major, and for allowing in-

Finance Chief Tells How He Saved Norse Gold From Nazis

Metal Taken From Oslo to England Under Constant Rain of Aerial Bombs

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 21.—Oscar Torp, Norwegian finance minister, described in an interview today his supervision of the dramatic transportation of Norway's gold reserves from Oslo to the coast and then by small craft and warship to England while German bombs and parachute troops dropped from the sky.

On April 8, the day before the Nazis marched into Oslo, Torp said, he directed the removal of millions of dollars worth of gold ingots from the capital.

As a representative of the German government entered the front door of the finance ministry early on April 9, Torp said, he left by the back door and, by automobile, followed a number of trucks filled with gold.

Torp, who reached this country several weeks ago, did not disclose the value of the gold, which he said now was safely deposited in Canadian and American banks. Last April, however, Norway's gold reserves were estimated at $84,000,000, although a part of that total already had been shipped here.

From Oslo, Torp said, he and his gold train moved slowly to Andalsnes under almost constant bombardment. Parachute troops landed within his view, he said, but most of them either were killed or captured immediately.

At Andalsnes, where the Allies had landed, the bombing was heaviest of all, he continued, while British and Norwegian vessels helped cover the transfer of gold to ships with steady artillery fire.

Some of the gold was transferred to a British warship, he said, but most of it was left on the trucks and taken to Molde, south of Trondheim, where, he related, 30 bombs, many of them incendiary, dropped near the ship to which the gold was being transferred.

During the transfer, he said, one of his fellow finance officials was wounded in the leg and another died of a heart attack.

Again the gold had to be transferred, he said, this time to five small fishing craft which ultimately arrived at Tromsø, where it was picked up by a British warship and taken, along with the Norwegian government officials, including King Haakon, to England.

New England Beats Off 10 Bomber 'Raids'

Defense of New York And Northeast Called Good by Gen. Chaney

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 21.—The Northeastern United States had a slight taste of modern aerial war conditions today as the Air Defense Command began a four-day test of air raid warning facilities and fleet Army pursuit ships sped aloft from five flying fields to intercept invading "enemy" bombers.

Summarizing the day's activities, Maj. Gen. James E. Chaney, commanding general of the ADC, described them as highly successful. Every "enemy" bomber was picked up by the ground network of more than 10,000 volunteer civilian observers at some 700 posts throughout the area, he said.

Army Air Corps "defenders" beaten off ten theoretical attacks were claimed in New England, with six groups of "bombers" described as "destroyed" and four others chased off to sea.

Boston, apparently the main objective of "attacks" in that area, was declared "invulnerable" against the initial bomber flights by an Army captain in charge of the maneuvers.

Some interceptions by pursuit ships, Curtiss P-40's, the Army's latest type of fighter, did not work out, Gen. Chaney said, adding that "We did not expect them to initially."

Gen. Chaney praised the cooperation of civilian observers who began their chilly vigils at dawn and continued them throughout the day in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island and the New York City area.

Turks Mass Great Army Facing Nazis

Ready for Any Action, Says Official Radio; Invasion Doubtful

By the Associated Press

Istanbul, Turkey, Jan. 21.—The official Turkish wireless announced tonight that the government "has gathered a great part of its army in Thrace (European Turkey), where it awaits any possible action."

Discussing the possibility of a German invasion across the Balkans, the radio said:

"Those who attack our steel fortress of Thrace are doomed to fall in the attempt! Turkey fought on eight fronts in the last war—no one should doubt her ability to fight on one front alone. Those who want to beat their heads on the rock may do so."

The broadcaster expressed doubt, however, that the Nazis could mass enough troops in Rumania to attempt the invasion, asserting:

"They would meet a wide Balkan front. The Balkans can muster more than 100 divisions and added to these would be British forces."

By April, the commentator continued, Germany at best could have

Mrs. Roosevelt Scolds Officials For Slighting Hospital Annex

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt yesterday started her third term as America's First Lady by upbraiding the Budget Bureau for not approving an appropriation large enough to operate fully the new $700,000 tuberculosis annex at Freedmen's Hospital.

She delivered her scolding in person to four Budget officials attending exercises dedicating the annex. Present, and enjoying the proceedings, were Secretary of the Interior Ickes, whose Public Works Administration provided the money to build the addition, and Paul V. McNutt, who as Federal Security Administrator is responsible for the hospital's administration, and 200 other citizens.

Reporters, seeking the reason for her lecture, discovered that hospital authorities have been furnished funds sufficient only to maintain a skeleton staff of nurses to operate the annex at not less than one-half capacity.

Mrs. Roosevelt, whose visits to District institutions have been responsible for many a civic furor over their inadequacies, was in top form yesterday.

Much in the manner of a wife upbraiding a self-indulgent husband, she observed that "money can always be found for wars, for the instruments of destructive conflict."

"I think we should pay for ourselves that we can always pay for things constructive. Really good work in this hospital is going to

Second Line Broken

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 21.—Australian shock troops led by a crack British regiment smashed through Italian defenses at Tobruk, Libya, to a depth of more than 5 miles today and captured many prisoners, including a general, the British high command announced.

"The advance is continuing," the British added.

Despite the presence of German dive-bombers in the Mediterranean area the Royal Navy stood offshore and poured high explosives into Tobruk, where 30,000 Italians are besieged.

Italian Cruiser Set Afire

"The Italian cruiser San Giorgio in Tobruk Harbor is in flames, together with a number of petrol (gasoline) stores and the like," the communiqué said.

Tanks and the Royal Air Force aided the land forces, which sprang to the assault at dawn after 15 days of the same careful preparation that recently reduced the Bardia garrison.

Capture of the Italian general made a declared total of 12 such officers thus far captured in the British campaign in Egypt and Italian Libya; Italian losses in dead, wounded and captured already are estimated to total 33,000.

The R. A. F. carried out all-night raids Sunday and yesterday before the ground charge began. The British airmen showered the outer defenses with explosives and the town and harbor installations with both explosive and fire bombs. Hits on marine repair shops and the aliening of Italian ground batteries were claimed.

British tactics were much the same as those used at Bardia, which fell after a two-day assault. The 30-mile line of outer defenses was surrounded by the British, cutting off retreat toward Derna to the west. British batteries were placed and Italian resistance was tested and found to be weaker than at Bardia, the British said.

Second Line Cracked

A succession of heavy and storms raged for the last few days, restricting visibility to a few feet and holding up the assault. The weather cleared somewhat today and Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell loosed his men and machines. The navy moved into firing positions off the coast.

Shortly after noon the land troops had penetrated both the first and

18 Fishermen Die as Boston Schooner Sinks

By the Associated Press

Boston, Jan. 21.—One by one, 18 fishermen plunged to death in their frozen fingers lost a precarious perch in the main masthead rigging of the sinking schooner Mary E. O'Hara.

The rigging and an even smaller portion of the foremast were all that remained above the surface where the fishing schooner sank in 40 feet of water after crashing into an anchored coal barge on the outskirts of Boston Harbor at 3 a. m., less than an hour from home.

Five of the crew lived to tell the story of their anguish when the lights of three vessels passed, their cries unheard.

Finally, when endurance was near its end, the trawler North Star bore down upon them. Capt. Lars Lundse nosed the North Star's prow into the rigging and took off four. A fifth, Cecil Crowell, fell from his perch, but was picked up by one of the trawler's dories.

Story of Survivors

This is the story the survivors told:

Three men were on deck, Stanley Conrad as lookout, Gilbert Smith as the wheel and Capt. Fred Wilson close by. Most of the others were asleep below. Without warning came a rending, grinding crash and Clayton Hines, who occupied a bunk in the fore peak, dashed out shouting, "She's sinking!" His scalp was split open and blood streamed over his face. He was among those lost.

All rushed out on deck, for the most part lightly clad, as Capt. Wilson sheered the schooner away from the barge and drove her nearly a mile, in a desperate attempt to reach shoal water, before the deck sank beneath his feet.

The schooner's deck and rigging were heavy with ice and she was deeply laden with fish after a week on the banks. Her two nests of dories, ten in all, were frozen into solid blocks of ice. Capt. Wilson strove in vain to chop a boat free, but when they floated off the deck the ten dories still were two compact lumps.

As the O'Hara sank the men swarmed up the ice-coated rigging. For a time they tried to buoy each other with conversation, and some prayed. After each passing of the vessels that left their shouts unheeded, there were fewer in the rigging. Capt. Wilson was the last to go.

Because such formality as "signing on" is unknown aboard fishing schooners, the O'Hara's owners tonight still were unable to issue an official list of the lost. They knew, however, that the tragedy left 5 widows and 21 children.

The barge, the Winifred Sheridan, of Philadelphia, was on route with two others from Jersey City to Rockland, Me., with coal and had anchored until heavy seas abated. Her crew reported that lights were burning and that an anchor watch was being kept when the accident occurred. They said the barge was not damaged and that they were unaware in the darkness that the O'Hara had foundered.

Electoral Colleges Name M. F. Doyle Permanent Head

Members of the Electoral Colleges of the United States concluded their meeting at the Mayflower Hotel yesterday by establishing a permanent organization not only to take an active part in the future quadrennial inaugurations of the President of the United States, but to work during the year in the support of the President.

The electors named Michael Francis Doyle, of Philadelphia, permanent president of the Electoral Colleges. William B. Rubin, of Wisconsin, was selected as secretary. Rubin is one of the six electors who has cast his vote three times for Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"Having taken part in the inauguration, the elector can now return to his State and help carry out the policies expressed by the President in his inaugural address," Doyle said in accepting his office.

Doyle, an attorney and American member of the world court at the Hague, has been acting as chairman of the Electoral Colleges' Committee since the first meeting in a body of the electors at the 1933 inauguration of Mr. Roosevelt.

438 Selects Leave Ft. Meade For Year in Texas and Georgia

Third Corps Area selectees numbering 438, approximately a third of them Washingtonians, yesterday boarded troop trains out of Fort Meade, Md., bound for a year's duty in Texas and Georgia.

Four hundred of the recruits were sent to Fort Sam Houston, Tex., where they will serve with units of the Second Division Infantry.

The selectees traveled in 11 Pullmans. Two baggage cars were converted into kitchens.

Earlier, 38 trainees entrained for Fort Benning, Ga., to be absorbed into the new Second Armored Division, part of which appeared in the inaugural parade.

Another contingent of 400 will leave Fort Meade for Fort Sam Houston today. These men also will serve with the Second Division.

At the same time, local Selective Service officials announced arrangements for the examination of 1,430 registrants at six Washington hospitals starting Friday and extending through January 31.

Other Washington trainees inducted this month have received duty assignments as follows: Fort Belvoir, 7; Fort Benning, 36; Edgewood Arsenal, Md., 34; Fort Monroe, Va., 14; and Nansemond Ordnance Depot, Va., 10.

Among the 34 trainees sent to the 412th Chemical Company, Second Battalion at Edgewood, was Donald Beall, 443 Newton Place Northwest, formerly connected with the news department of The Washington Post.

UNDER KINDLER'S BATON—Robert Viroval, 19, who will play with the National Symphony Orchestra tonight, goes over a score with his mother, Mrs. Ilona Viroval. Robert was a former child prodigy.

A violinist at the age of 3, soloist before a crowned head at 10 and now, at 19, making his concert debut with the National Symphony Orchestra—that's Robert Viroval.

Twice before he has played in Washington but tonight, when he sails into Mendelssohn's "Violin Concerto in E Minor," it will be his first Constitution Hall appearance before the baton of Conductor Hans Kindler.

Viroval, a musical prodigy, is Hungarian. Technically, the place of his birth—a spa called Daruvas—was part of Serbia at that time (March 10, 1921), but he explains that before the World War it was in Hungary and even today most of the population is Hungarian.

That settled, Viroval has temperament, which no doubt is to be expected of a former child prodigy who was an only child. He had very definite ideas as to how news photographers should and should not take his picture yesterday. They alternated between anger and amusement as he demanded:

"What's this for?" and ordered, "No, not that way, this way."

Mrs. Ilona Viroval, Robert's mother, is his traveling companion. Herself a pianist, she saw to it that a keyboard was his earliest plaything and virtually weaned him on a fiddle. At 10 he was performing for the late King Alexander of Yugoslavia.

In 1934 the great violinist Jeno Hubay took the boy under his wing. That was the year of Robert's first major concert, in Belgrade. He played, incidentally, the same concerto which he will do tonight.

It was also the year that he graduated to a full-sized violin.

Swimming is his favorite sport. Once, after a concert attended by Admiral Horthy, the Regent of Hungary, he walked up to the admiral and said: "Your playing is wonderful, but you are too stocky. Swim and swim a lot."

Young Viroval has been swimming ever since, when time permits, but he is still on the plumpish side.

Negotiations at Plane Plant Continue After Strike Deadline

San Diego, Calif., Jan. 21.—Although the union's strike deadline passed at 7 p. m., negotiations for the Ryan aeronautical company, which has important Government contracts, and the C. I. O. automobile workers, continued their labor contract discussions beyond that hour tonight.

Negotiations to avert the threatened strike were resumed today four hours before the deadline after company officials had labored throughout the early afternoon on a wage scale which might prove more acceptable to the union.

The joint negotiating conference was called by Harry C. Malcolm, federal conciliator.

Law Michener, West Coast C. I. O. director, said picket squads already had been organized with plans calling for 24-hour picketing.

Steel Negotiations

Pittsburgh, Jan. 21 (AP).—One man representatives of the United States Steel Corporation and the C. I. O. Steel Workers Organizing Committee met today in a three-hour conference on the union's informally presented demands for contract changes, including wage increases.

Neither William Beyne, director of industrial relations for "Big Steel," nor Philip Murray, the union chief, would comment at the conclusion of their conference in Beyne's skyscraper office but it was disclosed the negotiation will be resumed January 31. Murray is chairman of the S. W. O. C. and successor of John L. Lewis as president of the C. I. O.

"There was a broad discussion of an exploratory nature, of our mutual problems," a union spokesman said later.

Union sources have disclosed that these demands include higher wages, possibly 10 per cent for common laborers and a lesser pay hike for skilled workers; "streamlining" of the machinery for taking up workers' grievances; and the controversial closed shop, perhaps in a modified form.

Stressing that the conferences to date were informal, company sources said it was unlikely a speedy revision of the contract would be accomplished. They pointed out that even if Beyne and Murray should reach complete agreement, other executives and eventually the board most likely would have to approve any changes.

A union source said conferences with the Crucible Steel Co., which were started in New York today, and another one scheduled with the Jones & Laughlin Steel Co., would likely be delayed pending completion of negotiations with U. S. Steel.

Senators Hear Holt and Neely In Seat Debate

By John B. Oakes

The complexities of Democratic West Virginia factional politics were unfolded yesterday before a Senate committee trying to decide which of two contestants should be accepted as rightful Senator from the Panhandle State.

Former Gov. Homer A. Holt and his successor and political arch-enemy, Gov. Matthew M. Neely, each took the stand to convince the Senate Privileges and Elections Committee that his appointee and none other was entitled to West Virginia's vacant seat.

"A political deathbed appointment," a spite appointment, was the way Neely characterized Holt's action in naming Clarence E. Martin to succeed Neely the moment the latter resigned from the Senate to become Governor.

"Not Always Tranquil"

Holt denied the charge, but admitted in a triumph of understatement that "it is true that the political life of the Democratic party in West Virginia has not always been tranquil."

Gov. Neely seemed to agree with that.

However, both Holt and Neely, who have waged one of the more bitter political wars of recent years, insisted that there was nothing personal in the brickbats they have been hurling at each other. And in the friendliest manner they posed together for photographs after the hearing.

Holt contended that he had the right to appoint Martin (a former president of the American Bar Association) because he was still Governor and there was a Senate vacancy during the time between Neely's resignation as Senator and assumption of the office of Governor early in the morning of January 13.

"Public Policy" Invoked

Neely, on the other hand, claimed that he became Governor the very instant after he gave up his Senate seat, and therefore it was he, and not Holt, who should properly fill the vacancy. His nominee is Dr. Joseph Rosier.

Resting his case partly on grounds of "public policy," Gov. Neely declared in arguing for recognition of his candidate that "Rosier is one of West Virginia's great liberals, while if Martin had lived in the age of dinosaurs, he'd have been a reactionary even then."

Neely Took Four Oaths

Neely revealed for the first time that just to make sure there wouldn't be a slip-up, he took no less than three oaths as Governor in the crucial minutes around midnight the night of January 12, in addition to his oath at the inauguration on the 13th.

Holt's term of office expired promptly at midnight, but under West Virginia law he remained Governor until his successor qualified—and Neely was determined that there should be no such interval.

Similarly, Holt questioned the advisability of settling the tangle on a basis of "split seconds." But, he added, if split seconds were material to the issue, "I effectively split one."

The Post Regrets Error About Arias

The article in The Post on January 18 describing the exchange of views when President Roosevelt received Dr. Carlos W. Brin as the new Ambassador from Panama, referred to reports that President Arias of Panama "is personally of Nazi inclinations." The Post article then added: "These reports have not been denied."

The latter sentence should have read: "These reports have been denied."

The Post regrets the error.

Now, Isn't She 'Some Peanuts'?

MADELINE HUFFMAN, of Newport News, Va., a student at the King-Smith Audio School in Washington, has been selected to represent her hometown at the National Peanut Festival in Suffolk, Va., January 28 and 29. A peanut planter ball, coronation of the festival queen and a "peanut party" are on the two-day program.

Whistling Swans, Hamsters and Tahr Goats Take in Zoo

The population of National Zoological Park went up by seven specimens yesterday—three whistling swans, a pair of tahr goats and a pair of hamsters.

The swans and the hamsters were gifts from other Government agencies, the Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Institute of Health, respectively. From Bronx Zoo came the goats, or deposit.

Warrant Issued In Schultz Killing

New York, Jan. 21 (AP).—New Jersey authorities today issued a warrant in the unsolved killing of "Dutch" Schultz and three of his gangland henchmen in 1935 as the first step in an attempt to tie the prohibition gangster's death to Brooklyn's "Murder, Inc."

The warrant named Charles (Charlie the Bug) Workman, who is being held under $100,000 bail as a material witness in at least four killings charged against "Murder, Inc."

Mother of 5 Sobs Story Of Slaying

By the Associated Press

Portsmouth, Ohio, Jan. 21.—A woman who said she was forced by her husband to pull a plow and drag logs on their hill country farm sobs today that she shot to death her 42-year-old mate after he threatened in a jealous rage to kill her and their five children.

Brandel said Mrs. Goldie Pauley, 30, walked into his office at noon and told of firing a shotgun blast into the back of Lee Pauley, WPA worker, in their isolated Candy Run home, 15 miles north of here, as the couple's 14-year-old daughter, Ollie, looked on.

Mrs. Pauley said that last August, after she underwent an operation, Pauley forced her and Ollie to pull a plow and drag logs, the sheriff ruled.

Before the slaying, Brandel quoted Mrs. Pauley, the husband threatened to kill his wife, their children and a neighbor's family, but fell asleep as she hid his shotgun shells.

Determined on a technical charge of investigation, Mrs. Pauley said in a statement to Brandel:

"My husband was extremely jealous and constantly beat me. Monday he asked me which one of the neighbor boys I liked best. One of the boys had written notes to Ollie asking her to marry him. I told him I liked the boy. Then he started drinking and grabbed the shotgun, yelling that he would kill me."

"Ollie and Alice woke up and begged him to put the gun away. He told them to get back to bed or he'd kill them, too. I got the shotgun shells and when he couldn't find the shells, he threatened to stick a knife in my heart."

"Then he said, 'I'll let you live until morning, then I'll kill you and the John Keaton family. He lay down on the bed in the front room. I went to the rear bedroom and loaded the shotgun. His back was still toward me. I pulled the trigger. He didn't move or make a sound."

"Ollie saw the shooting. I sat down and waited until daylight. I got breakfast for the children and sent Ollie and Alice for help."

Nine Officials Indicted in Connecticut WPA

Hartford, Conn., Jan. 21 (AP).—A Federal grand jury has indicted Vincent J. Sullivan, of Bridgeport, former State deputy WPA administrator, and eight other WPA officials in connection with alleged irregularities. It was revealed today.

The charges are said to concern false travel vouchers and diversion of WPA labor and materials for purposes other than those specified in Government orders.

Jackson Tells Of 'Economic Fifth Column'

Attorney General Robert H. Jackson told yesterday of an "economic fifth column" in this country, the agents of which play for larger stakes than "dynamiting a few factories or damaging a few machines," and he declared:

"This sort of thing must stop."

In a speech before the Council of State Governments here, delivered by Solicitor General Francis Biddle because of Jackson's illness, the Attorney General said such agents worked to slow up defense production by swaying business and labor.

The defense program is also suffering, Jackson said, from the refusal of "a formidable list" of German companies to permit the unrestricted use here of patents and processes which they control.

Cites Case of Magnesium

As an example, he declared refusal of a patent-holding company, owned jointly by an American and a German company, to license more than a single American firm to produce magnesium had limited American production of this vital aircraft metal to one-fifteenth that of Germany "though the source of supply in the United States is unlimited."

Earlier, the Governors and other States officials heard Gov. Harold E. Stassen of Minnesota urge creation of a "Supreme Defense Council" of the President and the majority and minority leaders of the House and Senate as an alternative to passage of the lend-lease bill. The council would be vested with powers which the bill confers upon the President alone.

President Roosevelt replied at his press conference later that such a delegation of power would be unconstitutional.

While warning against what he called the industrial and economic fifth column, Attorney General Jackson minimized the danger of a military fifth column in this country.

"There is no possibility," he asserted, "that any military fifth column, in the guise of immigrants or visitors, could penetrate our borders today. Such a threat would have to spring from within."

He said the Department of Justice had its eye on potential leaders of "treacherous movements."

Jackson asserted he was convinced "the overwhelming number of resident aliens and naturalized citizens are loyal Americans" but advocated adoption by Congress of "some kind of custody or restricted freedom, parole or license for good conduct" depending on the character of the alien involved.

Jackson described "industrial espionage" as "the most effective foreign effort today" through which the latest secrets of business—its formulae, devices and technology—are discovered.

Stassen, criticizing the lend-lease bill, said that "we of the State governments hope that the National Administration will make or accept some revisions in this measure in the interest of national unity."

If the Administration does not amend the bill, however, the young Republican leader asserted, "we will nevertheless support the Federal Government and the President in the execution of the program."

Stassen also proposed that the Federal Government consider the merits of the Minnesota labor peace law, which provides a "cooling-off period" before strikes or lockouts during which conciliation is attempted.

Maximum Grant 75 Per Cent

Following Stassen's speech, the council heard its committee on relief propose that administration of the Federal work relief program be transferred to the State governments, which would receive grants of Federal funds in proportion to the States' need. The committee's proposal would allow the States to decide whether to administer work relief programs or grant direct aid.

The maximum Federal grant to the poorest States would cover 75 per cent of State relief expenses, while the minimum grant would be 50 per cent.

Simon E. Leland, of the council's special taxation committee, urged expansion of the "nonfiscal" function of taxes, not so much for obtaining income as to direct the course of the national economy.

"This use of taxes," according to Leland, a director of the Chicago Federal Reserve Bank, "needs to be considered as a means for avoiding some of the conditions which were present during the last war and which otherwise set the stage for post-defense collapse."

Such "fiscal devices" can be a substitute for other, "more rigid," price and production controls, he said.

The council also heard Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, of New York, explain how his State's defense council had instituted a campaign to subcontract defense orders, expand vocational training and make full use of labor and productive equipment for defense purposes.

Gov. O'Connor of Maryland told the council of the activities of State in law-enforcement problems of national defense.

War Prisoners To Get Red Cross Food Packages

The District Red Cross will accept package contributions for prisoners in Europe's camps, it was announced yesterday.

A trial shipment of ten packages to English prisoners in German camps has brought acknowledgments of receipt from six prisoners. As a result, 5,000 boxes will be sent this week.

Eleven pounds of food and cigarettes are included in each package at a cost of $2.20. Packages may be sent to relatives or friends, or contributions may be made for unidentified prisoners.

House Asked to Probe Cameron's Citizenship

An investigation of the citizenship of W. J. Cameron, Ford Motor Co. executive, was sought yesterday by Representative Geyer (Dem.-Cal.) in California, in a resolution.

The resolution asserted "it has been alleged in at least one publication of national circulation" that Cameron "swore falsely when he obtained his citizenship" in 1935.

The resolution requested the Attorney General to make the investigation and to bring about revocation of Cameron's citizenship if it was obtained "by fraud or other illegal means."

Priorities Delay Big Warships, Vinson Says

By John G. Norris

Post Staff Writer

Government control of the flow of essential supplies to the British and to our own defense forces is slowing down the construction of American battleships and other heavy naval craft while speeding the building of lighter vessels.

Chairman Vinson of the House Naval Affairs Committee disclosed this situation on the floor of the House yesterday as that body unanimously approved a $300,000,000 bill to strengthen major ships of the fleet against air attack.

The naval chairman, in a speech analyzing the present status of the shipbuilding program, revealed that steps taken to accelerate naval construction would produce 56 more combat craft within the next three years that had been contemplated originally.

Within that time, he stated, 151 destroyers instead of 100, 19 light cruisers instead of 16, and 35 submarines instead of 30 will join the fleet. Since the emergency started such information as this has been carefully withheld by the Navy Department.

In listing five factors which handicap further speed-up efforts, Vinson disclosed the situation as to the larger warships. One of these, he said, was "the effect of priorities."

"The shipbuilding program," Vinson told the House, "like everything else in the United States, has felt, and is feeling, the effect of the vast program of the War Relocation Authority and the expansion of our Army, especially the aircraft industry."

Priorities Cause Lag

"All of these compete for machine tools, aluminum products, armament, etc. To cope with this situation, a system of priorities has been worked out, which enables us to go ahead with the maximum expedition on all light vessels, such as destroyers, submarines, light cruisers, and auxiliary craft, but it has a tendency to slow down such vessels as battleships, large cruisers (battle cruisers), heavy cruisers, and airplane carriers."

There are 17 battleships listed as under construction, two 35,000-ton craft scheduled for completion early this summer, four more of the same type now well underway, four 45,000-ton craft laid down after these, and seven more "mystery" craft of probably greater size. Contracts for the later ones were awarded last summer.

Contracts for 11 aircraft carriers were let last year, while an unnamed number of the 54 cruisers listed as building are in the battle cruiser and heavy cruiser class.

The other four difficulties in speeding naval construction, Vinson declared were:

1. Difficulty in obtaining machine tools, which he said would largely disappear within a year.

2. Lack of trained personnel, which is expected, he said, to be corrected within the next six or nine months.

3. Difficulty in obtaining propelling machinery, principally in connection with smaller ships. Within 12 months, he added, "a greatly increased supply of Diesel engines for these ships will be available."

4. Shortage of armor and forgings, particularly restricting the building of battleships and other large vessels. He added that "it will be some time, probably two years hence, before the full capacity required is reached."

The antiaircraft protection measure was approved by a 130-to-0 standing vote after barely two hours debate. It was the first bill passed by either house of Congress this session.

More "Pom-Poms"

Under it all battleships, aircraft carriers, heavy and light cruisers, are to be modernized in the light of developments of the war to date, particularly the advent of the dive bomber.

More heavy antiaircraft guns and fast-firing "pom-poms"—four-barreled weapons designed to meet the dive bomber threat—will be placed on the warships. Light armor will be installed around "exposed" topside battle stations for protection of personnel against "solinters" and additional steel "blisters" will be added to the hull at the waterline to protect against bombs exploding in the water nearby.

Other improvements, Vinson said, will be improved mechanical equipment for loading guns, additional magazines, and installation of more modern fire control apparatus.

Gen. Parker to Study London's Civil Defense

New York, Jan. 21 (AP).—Milo J. Warner, national commander of the American Legion, today said Maj. Gen. Frank Parker, U. S. A., retired, of Washington, and Franklin D'Olier, of Morristown, N. J., first full-term legion commander, would accompany him to London for a study of civilian defense methods.

Under tentative plans they will leave sometime before February by clipper for Lisbon.

Mrs. Roosevelt Asks Uniform Draft Rules

More uniformity of local draft boards in regard to selecting men for Army service was recommended by Mrs. Roosevelt at her press conference yesterday. Discussing the Selective Service Act as it concerns husbands and others, the First Lady read a statement of Maj. Gordon Snow, of the manpower division of selective service, to the effect that the Army would rather not take "unfitted men."

The latter, even in cases when hold, are generally needed at home their families do not depend upon earnings of the head of the household more than in the Army. The fact that numerous married men have volunteered for service and that many single men have married since registration, have complicated decisions of local boards, Mrs. Roosevelt said.

She also pointed out that selective service was built on a decentralized system, so that each board could make its own decisions. Naturally, then, there has been difference in interpretation of the dependency clause of the act. Boards in certain localities have used only the pocket-book as a standard, while others have felt that fathers who have raised their families above the hazards of daily toil should not be penalized on that score.

More Rejections Than in 1918

Mrs. Roosevelt said she felt that local boards should "know more about the individual" and should take into consideration whether the selection of a man for service would disrupt his home—not only from the standpoint of finances but also "in other ways."

More men are being rejected because of physical defects than in 1918, according to figures given to Mrs. Roosevelt by Dr. Clarence A. Dykstra, Selective Service administrator. The record, based on incomplete statistics, indicated that more men than in 1918 are turned down because of defects in teeth, ears, eyes and the genito-urinary system. The same tabulation shows, however, that fewer men than in 1918 are being rejected because of deficiencies in lungs, heart and feet, and mental and nervous handicaps are less prevalent than those noted in the other draft.

Mrs. Roosevelt pointed out that Dr. Dykstra indicated that on the whole physical fitness among men was better now than in 1918, but that standards for admission into the Army were higher.

Discussion of the director for the women's program in national defense was also introduced into the First Lady's conference. She said she felt strongly that the person whether man or woman who was put in charge should have wide contacts and be an experienced organizer. She mentioned, also, that the problem of negotiating a training program with volunteer workers would be an extremely difficult one and would require the service of a person with rare ability. An emphatic denial greeted the question whether she herself would consider taking over such a work. She added she was not prepared to do so.

Would Exclude Party Slant

She said she thought Republicans and Democrats should be equally represented on the advisory boards and that every care should be taken to exclude a partisan slant from such a program.

Asked if Mrs. Roosevelt's observations presaged amendment of the Selective Service Act, Dr. Dykstra said:

"Mrs. Roosevelt has stated accurately one of the problems with which local boards have wrestled. Just what is dependency, in fact, is a difficult decision. Local boards have better than anyone else can determine this. Congress did not exempt or make provision for the deferment of married men as such. Whether the present law is all wish to change the present selection on married men, I do not know. All of us will know more about the whole question when we have had 60 days more experience with the enforcement of the act."

Inez on Rampart With Red Nose Draws Her Bead on Bombers

Inez Robb, International News Service writer, one of the volunteer civilian air defense observers in yesterday's mock air raids, herewith describes her experience.

By Inez (Molly Pitcher) Robb

Volunteer Air Defense Observer

Atop the Empire State Building, New York, Jan. 21—My paternal grandpa was an Indian fighter who could draw a bead at 500 paces. His rifle, with a right smart number of bullets, rests in the State historical museum in Idaho.

Today, in my adopted home town, I did my darndest to draw a bead on invading bombers. Tonight I have chili-blains, frostbite and a nose that is a red-ringer for W. C. Field's. But no notches!

As this is written, I am a frozen asset in Uncle Sam's defense bureau. I am a frozen asset in Uncle Sam's defense bureau. I am a frozen asset in Uncle Sam's defense bureau.

I am simply one of a number of old turkeys now manning the observation post on the world's highest building. My companions are all veterans of the World War and members of the American Legion.

If any enemy plane wishes to oblige us, could use a small firebomb to warm our hands and feet out here on this wind-swept parapet 88 stories above Fifth Avenue.

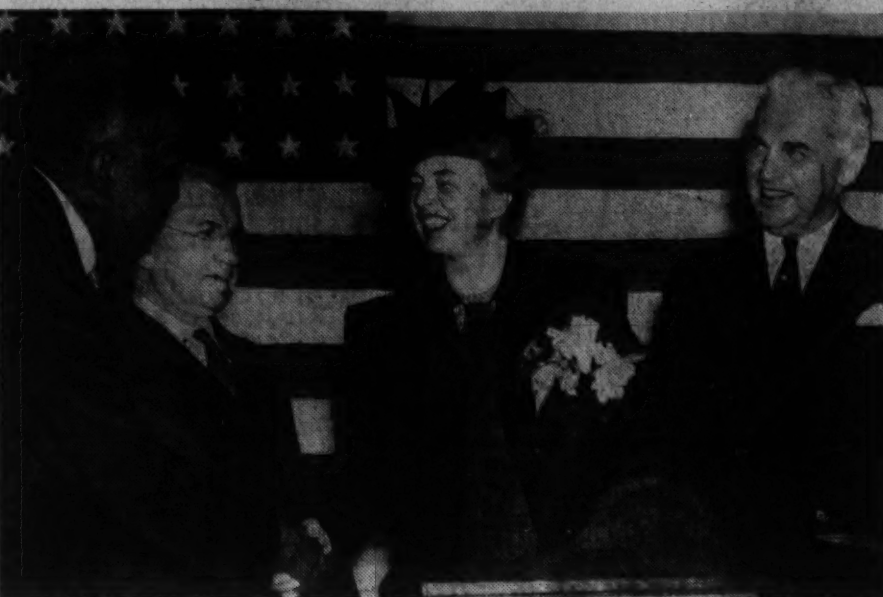

Ever since 6 a. m. we have been looking into the fair and open face of heaven, doing our best to draw a bead on any bomber coming to destroy the city. As of the first instance, we have cricks in our necks and sun spots before our eyes, but we are not certain that we have been responsible for downing any bombers.

At 7:10 a. m. Maj. Donald Pitts peered into the murky fog hanging over New York City. He came up with two planes. The major wheeled smartly, ran to the nearest telephone, shouted, "Army flash!" and reported his findings to the central air defense bureau.

But even the major couldn't be certain they were enemy bombers. Maybe they were just a couple of other planes.

We are doing our best to follow the rules, one of which is right out of Uncle Pete's poker club. We must have a pair or better to open.

First Lady Dedicates New Chest Clinic

Mrs. Roosevelt Urges Dynamic For Schools

Mrs. Roosevelt charged more than 100 public school educators and public recreation heads yesterday to teach American youth "to stand on its feet and think on its feet" for democracy as ably as Communist youth does for its beliefs.

She addressed a group of educational and recreational officials invited here by the WPA to discuss their problems in a three-day session at the Washington Hotel.

"Do you feel you are giving sufficient experience and ability to youth to stand on its feet and think on its feet?" she asked the group.

Communists Better Trained

"I find young Communists are trained and put their ideas over in their groups. They speak with such feeling that others don't seem to be able to come up to them. Their opponents don't seem to be quick enough and sure enough of their convictions to stand up against the Communists."

The First Lady looked over the crowded room, then demanded, "Do you think I'm right?"

There was a murmur of assent. "Then you ought to do something about it," she declared.

Public schools are "an instrument of democracy" concerned not only with the young but with the life of the entire community, Mrs. Roosevelt said. She said schools which "have the possibility of bringing people together" should not stand idle.

Some Problems They Face

In extemporaneous discussion following Mrs. Roosevelt's speech, the delegates cited the following problems:

A "great lag throughout America" of public recreation facilities. The lack of money to construct facilities to perform such work.

A lack of the recognition of problems in a democracy, and the need of "getting down to brass tacks" in the primary grades.

The problem of keeping Americanized students "American."

A lack of trained leaders. The delegates of the two divisions—educational and recreation—held a joint session to hear Mrs. Roosevelt yesterday. National defense problems will be discussed at today's session which opens at 9:30 a. m. at the Hotel Washington.

Single planes don't count. Unless we see a pair or better we are not to annoy the central air defense bureau.

That's why the solitary plane overhead laying a smoke screen at noontime was so confusing to this eagle-eyed Ellie. Instructions didn't cover this point, but, golly, it looked pretty ominous until the smoke spellout "I. J. Fox—Furrier."

From this windy parapet, where Manhattan's only observation post is located, a plane spotter is almost overwhelmed by the immensity of his responsibility. Look in any direction you see a real link between an enemy would be a nifty not to attempt to bomb.

To the south and east, where the East River bends toward the harbor, is the Brooklyn Navy Yard, a tremendous base. Its four huge stacks, belching black smoke, stick up like so many sore thumbs, an invitation to raiders.

Directly to the south is the great forest of lovely spires rearing up from the skyscrapers that are lower Manhattan. To the west, in the elevated highway, and beyond in New Jersey, the towering Pulaski skyway, both main arteries to and from New York.

Manhattan is ringed with the docks that make it the greatest port on the continent, and there, so far below, are the three stacks of the French liner Normandie, immobilized since the beginning of the war.

Out on Long Island, single, shining transport planes point the way to LaGuardia, the big flying field, not the Little Flower.

All around us is a target even more compact, more resplendent than London or Warsaw or Rotterdam. The Red Cross was on hand when the observation post opened at 6 a. m. It brought recreation and helmets which, literally, have been life savers. Most of the legionnaires arrived in their jaunty little overseas caps which are no more equipped with ear muffs than my new spring pill box.

Our ears would have frozen to our noggin in nothing flat without those helmets. But they have saved our ears if not our schnozzles.

Only Al Smith, jaunty in his brown derby, braved the weather with his ears as natural. The former Governor of New York joined us in the patrol for a quarter of an hour.

the crosswalk when he was hit by a westbound vehicle operated by Mrs. Bridget E. Bradfield, 30, of 1208 Owen Place Northeast. She will appear at a coroner's inquest, the date of which has not been set.

A former employee of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., Mr. Snyder was a native of Washington and a graduate of McKinley High School. He had been visiting friends and was only a block from home when fatally injured. Surviving are his mother, Mrs. Frank A. Snyder, and two sisters, Helen and Frances.

Charles G. DeMond, colored, 31, of 1829 California Street Northwest, was held for Police Court action and was released under $1,000 bail last night after an inquest into the death of John Marshall, 68, of 1629 L Street Northwest.

Marshall died at Casualty Hospital last Saturday of infection after his left leg had been amputated as a result of injuries he suffered October 31 in the 1000 block of Bladensburg Road Northwest.

The jury decided DeMond was negligent in the operation of his car when he struck Marshall. DeMond will be arraigned in Police Court this morning.

At the second inquest, Frank D. Christmas, 18, of 1908 Varnum Street Northwest, and Leon W. Trenary, 24, of 2634 Twenty-seventh Street Northwest, were absolved of blame in the death of Ferdinand Pettit, 53, of 2434 Thirty-ninth Place Northwest.

The victim died at Mount Alto Hospital Sunday after a collision between two cars at Thirty-second Street and Cathedral Avenue Northwest, January 10. Pettit was a passenger in Trenary's car. The jury determined his death to be a result of an accident.

Francis Davis, 41, of Barnesville, Md., was injured critically last night when his 1928 model automobile was in collision with a car operated by A. E. Sweeney, of 4400 Ivy Street, Brentwood, Md. The crash occurred in Riggs Mill Road between New Hampshire Avenue and University Drive in nearby Prince Georges County.

County police said that Davis lost control of his car and swerved into the path of Sweeney's car. The victim was taken to Casualty hospital where he was treated for fractures of the spine, nose and ribs.

Need Personnel for Training

McNutt and Secretary Ickes joined in the laughter again when Mrs. Roosevelt, calling herself "just a woman and very ignorant about figures," said she hoped "these budget officials are appreciating this."

Mrs. Roosevelt not only cited Freedmen's present need for more nurses, but recalled that about a year ago the hospital lost standing because it could not give its personnel sufficient training.

"We must have enough patients to give proper training," Mrs. Roosevelt observed. "But Freedmen's lacked patients by no means because there were not enough sick people, but simply because there was not enough money to care for them."

In Washington, she said, should set an "example to the rest of the country by giving the best possible care to Negro citizens."

Ickes, in his dedicatory speech, called the annex a "symbol of progress of the Negro people." He said President Roosevelt, by spending for social improvements, had only begun to recognize the "obligation."

"We cannot stop here," he declared.

McNutt struck at housing conditions in the Capital as an important factor in the city's tuberculosis death rate. Remarking upon the close connection of the disease with poor living conditions, he declared:

"Observation of housing and community conditions here has convinced me that we have the worst—and the best—in dwelling places for low-income groups and for families on relief."

McNutt promised that the Federal Security Agency will "go forward with increasing effectiveness against tuberculosis and other hazards which threaten the health and well-being of this city's Negro population."

Harrison Quits Post In Alien Registration

The resignation of Earl G. Harrison as director of alien registration was announced last night. Harrison, a Philadelphia lawyer, had accepted the post with the understanding that he would remain only six months. Harrison will remain available to the Justice Department in an advisory capacity.

WHERE DEATH STRUCK—Map at top shows how District's eleventh traffic fatality occurred. Pedestrian Spencer Sahlberg, 45, of 1740 Riggs Street Northwest, crossed K Street against traffic light from south side to north but in the crosswalk was struck by a bus. Lower map shows how John Snyder, 29, of 2635 Otis Street Northeast, met death crossing Rhode Island Avenue Northeast from south to north curb 66 feet west of Central Avenue. He died at Casualty Hospital, the twelfth traffic death this year in Washington.

For First Time Wallace Presides

Vice President Wallace yesterday was promised a gift copy of Robert's Rules of Parliamentary Order "so he can master the rules the Senate does not follow."

The offer was made by Majority Leader Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky, in a speech of welcome to Wallace after the Senate's new presiding officer had weathered his first day in the chair, a routine, hour-long session.

Wearing a dark blue suit, white shirt and light blue tie, Wallace mounted the rostrum promptly at noon and called on the Rev. Z. Barney Phillips, Senate chaplain, for the customary opening prayer. The former Secretary of Agriculture, a serious expression on his face, then laid on his desk a type-

Dog Spared Icy Death

The dog slipped from the ice cake and rescuers threw out a piece of timber which it promptly clung to (top). Timber and dog drifted near shore and a workman (left) pulled them out. written sheet of instructions on Senate procedure and banged his gavel with assurance.

Looking down from galleries packed with post-inaugural crowds were the Vice President's wife, his 20-year-old daughter, Jean Wallace, and—a few seats away—Film Star Edward G. Robinson.

The Vice President was prompted from time to time by John Crockett, chief Senate clerk, when he failed immediately to identify Senators rising for recognition from the chair.

Wallace was silent after one routine request for unanimous consent to the printing of a newspaper article in the Congressional Record. Crockett turned to Wallace and said in a stage whisper:

"Without objection, it is so ordered."

A Matter of Order

The Vice President looked somewhat startled when Senator Holman (Republican), of Oregon, rose in the course of an exchange between Senators Wiley (Republican), of Wisconsin, and Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, to voice a familiar Congressional complaint.

"Mr. President, may we have order in the chamber?"

Wallace hesitated a moment, rapped his gavel and looked around the chamber without speaking. A dozen Senatorial conversations were broken off.

Senator Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, the veteran legislator who, as Senate President pro tempore, is expected to give frequent counsel to Wallace, followed the day's proceedings with a vigilant expression, but did not take the chair at any time.

Barkley, in his brief address of congratulations, declared that Wallace already rendered distinguished service to the country and the world.

Wallace rose long enough to express thanks for "the kindly wishes of the Senate."

Schulte Cancels Safety Meeting

cancellation. They were prepared to attend.

The Indiana legislator was called yesterday and asked at what hour today's announced meeting would be held.

"There isn't going to be any meeting," he said. "I haven't time to get everyone together."

He was asked when the proposed conference might be held.

"It will be some time," Schulte declared without further elaboration.

Washington's traffic death toll is triple the record for this time last year and authorities are anxious to catch Congress' ear with some proposed legislative recommendations. Traffic control heads admittedly eager to comply with Schulte's demands for "immediate action," but major remedies under consideration require Congressional appropriations and law changes.

Greet Plan Favorably

Schulte's announcement last week that he intended to call the Congress together for today was greeted with favor by those on the suggested invitation list. He even proposed calling the meeting earlier, but agreed to a week's deferment because of inaugural preparations.

The four Police Court judges, it was learned at the Courthouse, were willing to participate in the conference and were ready to visit Schulte's office as soon as the meeting hour was set.

Police Superintendent Brown had prepared certain material and statistics for presentation to the conference, but said last night, "I haven't heard any more about it."

Corporation Counsel Keech was one of those suggested for a part in the discussion. He said he "hadn't heard anything," but would be "more than glad to attend whenever I'm called."

Representatives of the Capital Transit Co., trucking concerns and the taxi industry also were on the invitation list as well as other Capitol Hill legislators charged with District matters.

Twelve persons have been killed in traffic here since January 1 as against three for the same period in 1940. Citizen groups the city over have pleaded for action. There are pending proposals for tightening permit laws, providing additional policemen and changing the present Traffic Court procedure in the interest of greater efficiency.

Lease Bill Too Drastic, Says Kennedy

bill, and restrictions on use of American warships with American crews as convoys. To coordinate executive and legislative aid-Britain efforts, he said a small Congressional committee might serve.

Off and on all afternoon, members pressed Kennedy on the "Lease" Secretaries Knox and Stimson last week said would face England in the next 60 to 90 days.

"I can't say what it is," Kennedy replied at one point. "There's been a crisis all along." Again he said there had been a crisis for the last six months but he had not been advising the situation is "any more critical" than when he left London.

"I can't pass on the emergency," he said at still another point, "because I don't know what it is."

Earlier in the day Kennedy testified that no present crisis that he knew of would warrant Congress surrendering all the powers proposed for the President in the pending bill.

Destroyer Deal Called Unusual

In morning session cross-examination by Representative Tinkham (Republican), of Massachusetts, Kennedy had said "we have done enough unusual things to have war declared on us long ago," but had said he didn't think Germany would declare it unless it was in her "best interest."

"Late in the day, Representative Eberhart (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, asked what were the "unusual" things America had done.

"We have performed a great many unusual acts," replied the Ambassador. "I think turning over 50 destroyers to England was unusual. All of our efforts now are unusual acts."

"Do you think they are in violation of international law?" asked Eberhart.

"I don't think there is any more international law," said Kennedy.

President "Excellent Trader"

Eberhart asked if in the present situation Congress shouldn't give the President full powers.

"I don't believe the situation yet warrants giving up all powers," replied the witness. "England didn't."

do it until five months after the war started."

"Yes, and that's the reason she's in her present sorry state," said Eberhart.

"It is, indeed," agreed Kennedy.

Eberhart—"What you want is more balance in the bill!"

Kennedy—"That's right."

Eberhart—"What do you think of the President's ability to bargain on munitions?"

Kennedy—"You mean as a trader?"

Eberhart—"Yes."

Kennedy—"Excellent."

British Expect Bill's Passage

Kennedy moved over to a seat near his questioner as Representative Francis P. Bolton (Republican), of Ohio, posed a few queries.

"You want England to win because they have the same life that we do?" asked Mrs. Bolton.

"I want to see them win," replied Kennedy. "But I want to see them win because it gives us time."

"Do you think the passage of this bill would have a good effect on their morale?" asked Mrs. Bolton.

"I would like to say so," replied the witness, "but I cannot. They are in a high pitch now. They believe we are going to do it."

Kennedy agreed defeat of the bill would adversely affect British morale.

In the morning he had told Mrs. Rogers (Republican), of Massachusetts, that "You can't beat the German army with psychology."

Kennedy testified that while some British officials believed that the United States should go to war with Germany, others disagreed with this view, fearing it would cut down arms supplies.

Negotiated Peace Impossible

Other statements by the British Ambassador.

That when Parliament passed the emergency powers bill in two years without debate, "democracy" went out the window, but it does not follow it "can't come back."

That press reports from Britain had given rise to a complete picture of the British situation and no information which the Government might have charged it greatly.

That a negotiated peace at this time is impossible, but if the war lasts two or three years longer, with Russia neutral, communism may sweep western Europe.

That you "can't wake people up unless they fear something, and you can't wage war in your spare time."

That England should lay all her assets "on the table" and after that "we should lend them money."

That if the United States were prepared for war, and could end it in a year, he would declare war on Germany tomorrow.

That the idea "that you can get into a war and not send manpower is a very thin reed."

That American aid to Britain could stop short of the point at which it becomes necessary to send troops abroad.

House Caucus Approves Five New Chairmen

Five new House committee chairmen were approved by a Democratic caucus yesterday as the House majority completed its committee assignments for the new session.

The Senate, in confirming both majority and minority committee assignments, yesterday elected Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, chairman of its Committee on Rules. Byrd succeeds former Senator Neely (Democrat), of West Virginia, who resigned to become Governor of his State.

The Senate awarded five committee places to each of the seven new Republican Senators elected last November and to Senator Ball (Republican), of Minnesota, appointed before the election to fill out the unexpired term of the late Senator Ernest Lundeen.

Taft on Finance Unit

Several Republicans who served in the last Congress were affected by shifts in committee assignments. Among them were Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, who leaves the Appropriations and Judiciary Committees to take a seat on the Finance Committee, and Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, who was given a place on the Military Affairs Committee. The Republican representation on several committees was enlarged in accordance with a ratio worked out by Majority Leader Barkley and Acting Minority Leader Austin, reflecting the G. O. P. gain of three Senate seats at the last election.

The new chairmen are as follows: Representative Moser (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, Census Committee; McGhee (Democrat), of Mississippi, Claims; Gossett (Democrat), of Texas, Elections No. 2; Peterson (Democrat), of Georgia, Elections No. 3; and Gavigan (Democrat), of New York, War Claims.

Other Assignments

New majority members of the Appropriations Committee are Representatives Bean, of Illinois; Thomas, of Texas, and Harrington, of Iowa.

Other Democratic assignments to major committees included: Agriculture—Crenel, of Kentucky; Poage, of Texas; Grant, of Alabama; Cannon, of Florida, and Wene, of New Jersey.

Judiciary—Bryson, of South Carolina; Craven, of Arkansas; Thom, of Ohio, and Eliot, of Massachusetts. Labor—Beller, of New York; Sullivan, of Missouri; Worley, of Texas; Scanlon, of Pennsylvania, and Kelley, of Pennsylvania.

Military Affairs—Durham, of North Carolina, and Davis, of Tennessee.

Naval Affairs—Izaz, of California; Flaherty, of Massachusetts; Sasser, of Maryland; Imhoff, of Ohio, and Heffernan, of New York.

Blind Volunteers Quickest to Detect 'Invading' Planes

Worcester, Mass., Jan. 21 (AP)—The use of two blind volunteers to "spot" bombing planes proved successful today.

William J. Carroll, commander of a Legion post manning a tower atop Green Hill as part of the Army Air Corps practice session, said the two blind volunteers—Elmer Frisberg and John Cooney—simultaneously picked up a distant "invading" plane long before it was heard by the men who had their sight.

The two heard the motors and pointed almost due east. Soon the glasses of the legionnaires found the planes at about 20,000 feet.

Innocents Rejoice That Quality of Mercy Is Not Lost

Chicago, Jan. 21 (AP)—A man with a big heart—albeit sad—was John Wallace as he sat in felony court today.

Before the bar was the man whose automobile killed Mrs. Wallace on Christmas Day and who was accused of fleeing the scene of the accident.

Through his attorney, the defendant pleaded that a one-year sentence, recommended by the State, was too severe because he had never been in trouble before, and, too, he had five small children. The judge concluded, 65-year-old John Wallace, tears in his eyes, asked the court's permission to speak.

"Your honor," he said, "I am the one who has been hurt in this case. But for the sake of this man's five children, I am asking that he be placed on probation."

Unhesitatingly, Judge Thomas H. Green said, "It is so ordered." Then, bowing his head toward Wallace, he added:

"What a man you are!"

Cudahy Says Germans Can't Invade Britain

By the Associated Press
Milwaukee, Jan. 21.—John C. Cudahy, former Ambassador to Belgium, expressed the opinion today that Germany would find it impossible to invade England and that the European war would be brought to a military decision before the end of next summer.

"I had the same feeling about another phase of the war last spring," he said. "I was certain then that the Germans were to move to a major action in the Low Countries. And they did."

Cudahy added quickly, "beware of predictions in Europe," remarking that whereas statesmen once looked forward five and ten years they now forecast in terms of a year.

Sofia, Bulgaria, Jan. 21 (AP)—Usually reliable informants said tonight that Col. William J. Donovan, United States observer, who has been traveling in Europe and Northern Africa, emphasized in a frank talk with Bulgarian government leaders that the United States is pushing production to the utmost in a strong effort to aid Britain.

Donovan himself explained that because of the confidential nature of his mission he was unable to say anything. He expressed regret that such information had been given out.

He talked with Foreign Minister Ivan Popoff during the day and have dinner with the British Minister and plans to see King Boris tomorrow.

New York, Jan. 21 (AP)—The German radio, commenting on the arrival of Col. Donovan in Sofia, said foreign press representatives in Berlin were told "we are always rather skeptical with regard to such special delegates." The radio said Donovan's appearance in the Bulgarian capital was noted in Berlin without official comment.

Hatch Finds No Shortage In Smoky Park

By the Associated Press
Senator Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, chairman of a subcommittee investigating Supt. J. Ross Eakins' management of Great Smoky Mountains National Park, declared yesterday he had seen no instance where the park official had profited by violations of regulations at the park.

Interrupting the testimony of Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, who long has sought Eakins' removal, Hatch said the committee employed a firm of private accountants to determine if there was a shortage at the park, particularly $114,000 of emergency funds, which McKellar said were unaccounted for.

Hatch said the auditors were instructed, "if there was any shortage, to find it," and that the General Accounting Office was asked to make a check. After the reports were in, Hatch added, Treasury investigators were borrowed to go down to Tennessee to check up on vouchers.

There were "grave signs, not of irregularities, but of gross wrongdoing."

No Sign of Shortage
"There has not been a single report to the committee," Hatch concluded, "where anybody connected with this whole matter ever received a penny to his personal use and advantage."

"I merely state that for the record because if there was any shortage, there ought to be a prosecution down in Tennessee, there ought to be an indictment and some people ought to be sent to the penitentiary."

At one point in the hearing Hatch remarked that he wasn't sure that "this committee is proceeding legally." The resolution directing the investigation, he said, authorized it to make an investigation during the last Congress. McKellar said he would seek an amendment extending the period of its authority, if necessary.

G. M. to Build Parts for 200 Planes a Month

By the Associated Press
Detroit, Jan. 21.—The part the automobile industry is to take in the volume production of bomber planes took more definite shape today at General Motors announced it would produce parts and sub-assemblies for 200 twin-engine planes a month, to be built by North American Aviation, Inc.

Chrysler Corporation and the Ford Motor Co. previously had announced tentative agreements to cooperate similarly in the production of Martin, Douglas and Consolidated bombers. Chrysler and Ford plan parts output for 100 planes a month each.

General Motors' airplane parts production will be handled by the corporation's Fisher Body division in plants in Detroit and Cleveland, with final assemblies at a new airplane plant to be built by North American at Kansas City, Kans. In placing its estimate at 200 bombers a month, General Motors explained it was planned to make extensive use of Fisher forge and foundry facilities.

Back to Build Engines
A corporation spokesman said today that the production of small parts is expected to get under way within 30 days and that by July 1, between 50 and 60 per cent of the bomber subassemblies will be coming out of the Fisher plants.

The Allison division of General Motors currently is producing liquid-cooled aircraft engines at the rate of 350 a month. It is planned to expand this output to approximately 1,000 a month by July, Buick expects to have its aircraft engine production up to 500 a month by early 1942.

Plan Laid out by Knudsen
The plan to have the automobile industry cooperate in the production of some 36,000 bombers, most of them of the multi-engine type, was laid before representatives of the automobile manufacturing companies here last October by William S. Knudsen, in charge of the production phase of the national defense program.

Each car maker as well as parts and body plant representatives was asked to report on what facilities he had available to him in the aircraft procurement program.

The General Motors, Ford, and Chrysler undertakings are the immediate major results of the Knudsen plan.

Reuther Visits Plants
The War Department disclosed yesterday that an Army plane had been made available to Walter Reuther, author of a plan to produce 500 aircraft a day in automobile plants, for visits to two big auto plants.

Indicating that the department was still giving earnest consideration to the labor leader's proposal, officials said the plane has been made available to him at the instance of Robert P. Patterson, undersecretary in charge of industrial mobilization.

Reuther traveled in the Army ship to Hartford, Conn., where he spent more than three hours at the Pratt & Whitney engine plant, and to Baltimore, where he spent a similar time at the Glenn L. Martin factory.

D. C. Irish Oppose Use by British Of Bases in Eire

The Washington Irish Societies asked the United States yesterday to use its moral influence to discourage Great Britain from the possible seizure of Irish ports for bases.

The societies addressed letters to President Roosevelt, Secretary of State Hull and the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

"Britain," declared the societies, "has no more right to these ports than she has to the ports of New York, Boston and Philadelphia."

The letters asserted seizure of Irish ports would be an act of aggression and would meet with resistance, thus extending "the horrors of war to a country committed to peace and enjoying its blessings," and adding "superfluously to the number of Britain's armed foes."

Hatch said he thought "the whole system was outrageous," and that since the accounts involved had been paid by the General Accounting Office, his "faith in the General Accounting Office had been shaken."

Part of the blame for the looseness of the accounting system, Hatch told McKellar, "lies with you and me, in voting appropriations as we did, huge sums, and telling officials to put people to work."

Reynolds' acceptance of the job had been regarded as certain by Senate majority leaders after Senator McCarran flatly refused the assignment last Friday.

The night before, Reynolds had told the Northeast Businessmen's Association, that if he received appointment as District committee chairman, he would do "everything I possibly can to make Washington the finest capital city in the world."

He said that his work as a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, and as ranking member of the Military Affairs Committee, would both require more time than ever, as a result of the national defense program.

He added that he counts on continuing his interest in restricting immigration, in deporting alien criminals, and in fighting "communism, fascism and nazism."

As a result of these interests, he said he did not know whether or not he could give the amount of time necessary to the chairmanship of the District committee that "it would deserve."

He added that he counts on continuing his interest in restricting immigration, in deporting alien criminals, and in fighting "communism, fascism and nazism."

As a result of these interests, he said he did not know whether or not he could give the amount of time necessary to the chairmanship of the District committee that "it would deserve."

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee yesterday called the first meeting of his group for 10:30 a. m. Monday for organization of subcommittees.

D. C. Recovers From Effects of Inauguration

The Capital yesterday settled down to routine business none the worse for its three-day inaugural activities.

Streetscar jangling platforms are back in place; grandstands are rapidly disappearing, and rubbish and debris picked up by the city's white-wings hit a new high.

Pennsylvania Avenue yesterday was "clean as a whistle," according to William A. Xanten, supervisor of the District Refuse Division.

The loading platforms, removed Sunday by the Highway Department, were returned before most Washingtonians left their homes yesterday.

Skinner & Garrett, local firm which constructed the President's reviewing stand and the grandstands in the Court of Freedom, began the task yesterday of removing the lumber. The Washington Baseball Club, which rented the stands in front of the American Security & Trust Co. and Riggs National Bank, had removed the stands Monday night so as not to interfere with banking yesterday.

All other stands along the route, which the Inaugural Committee rented from Coronado Amusement Co. of New York, were rapidly being dismantled for shipment back to New York.

Marks left in the street by heavy tanks will "heal," according to Highway Director H. C. Whitehurst. The tread marks left scars.

Culprits ran off with 23 flags which the District posted along the parade route.

Vendors along the route yesterday continued to sell their wares—some for half price—to the remaining visitors in town.

Figures given by Xanten reveal that 1,000 cubic yards of paper was collected by 200 men in 112 truckloads. Paper was burned in the department's incinerators.

Nelson Eddy Unlaxes Over Coffee and Cakes

Admires New Hollywood and Says He Can't Act; Today Is Deadline for One-Act Tournament; This, That and the Other About the Theater

SO NELSON EDDY, Mrs. Eddy and their son visited Mount Vernon yesterday afternoon, before temporarily leaving Washington and its gala, inaugurations, gay parties, etceteras. Temporarily, because Mr. Eddy begins his concert tour on February 4 and will be back in the Capital on Palm Sunday.

But an eyelash ahead of the launching of the family safari to the shrine of the First President, he found time to host the drama desks at coffee and orange juice in the "Nelson Eddy Suite," so bronze-plaques on the door by the far-sighted management of the Raleigh Hotel, just as dawn was breaking at the chill and ghastly hour of 11 a. m. Mr. Eddy was in fine fettle and quickly dispelled the sardonic rumors that he is an austere and aloof fellow who would rather not be annoyed by press or public. He enjoys this friendly sort of annoyance very much, but, after all, self preservation still is the first law of nature.

As a matter of fact, Nelson Eddy used to be a newspaper man himself, having gone the route from something akin to copy boy to legman, copy desk, city desk and advertising man on various Philadelphia gazettes, although born in Providence, R. I., a fellow-townsmen of George M. Cohan. He knows his way around the Fourth Estate as well as he does around the movie lots and the musical heights.

At the moment, he is fascinated by Hollywood's deflation from a community of exorbitant spenders and flashy exhibitionists to a down-to-earth city in which even the biggest stars are moving out of their palatial estates into modest homes, driving small cars and saving their money—as much of it as the Federal and State tax collectors allow them to keep. He also is impressed by the charitable impulses that actuate the film colony and, "off the record," cites the cases of a famous director, who disburses far more than the allotted 15 per cent of his income in personal benefactions, and the popular actor who waged a spirited tilt with his studio for a $150,000 salary for a single picture and then, when he had won said to his bosses, "That's fine. Now I don't want a cent of that money. Give it all to the Red Cross." Having already contributed his 15 per cent, it was necessary to secure a special dispensation from Washington to make the gift. That, it appears, is the way Hollywood is these days. And it is pleasant to hear Mr. Eddy tell about it.

It always has been pleasant to visit with Nelson Eddy—and that first name has nothing to do with it—even in these usually unsatisfactory, long-distance telephone interviews. How that ivory tower came ever got around I'll never know. His next picture will be a musicalized version of "The Guardsman," with Rite Stevens, who also appeared in last Sunday night's Inaugural Gala, singing the opposite role. He doesn't know what the picture is to be called, but hopes it won't be "Passion in a Penthouse." Also he entertains no delusions concerning himself as an actor. He is a singer. "I don't know the first thing about acting and never pretended to, beyond waving first one arm and then the other and both when it begins to get hot." Pretty swell people, this Nelson Eddy. Sometime he hopes to see something of the United States. "He's only been over it 30 or 40 times on tour, but, so far, hasn't seen anything much of it. He was making a start here yesterday."

Other old friends have been bobbing up of late here, too. Al Trahan, who could be a consummate artist if he didn't prefer to subordinate his musical artistry to monkey-business, was down for the Alfalfa Dinner and had time to say "Hello," and Don Bestor, erstwhile pianistic wheelhorse of the old Benson Orchestra of Chicago and now famous with his own band, breezed in to see that President Roosevelt was securely inducted into office for the third time. That done, he returned to Baltimore where he is in the midst of an indefinite engagement at the Belvidere Hotel. Nice boys. Did I ever tell you about the time...?

Those ticket-selling demons, the distaff decorations of the Washington Variety Club, are doing their bit by selling tickets for the President's Birthday Celebrations in the lobby of the Willard Hotel. And, boy, can they sell 'em!

Five o'clock this afternoon is the deadline hour for applications of Washington, Maryland and Virginia amateur acting groups desirous of participating in the 1941 D. C. One-Act Play Tournament beginning on February 24 in Roosevelt High School Auditorium.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Laughon (Elsa Lanchester) yesterday joined the list of celebrities coming for the January 30 celebration of the President's Birthday. When Miss Lanchester was here last year, she observed: "Really, Charles must take in one of these annual affairs. They are not only stimulating, they are inspiring. I promise to bring him next year." So here he comes—which just goes to show something or other about man and that "weaker" sex.

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Jan. 21. The reason we haven't got the Academy dinner is that they haven't yet sold the radio or picture rights to it, and they're asking $25,000 for each. I wish they'd settle on a night, and also get going on the dinner to honor Frank C. A. P. R. A. There isn't a person in Hollywood who wouldn't welcome an opportunity to do him honor—even those who've never had the privilege of working for him.

I hear that Ronnie Colman's picture is being held up for lack of a leading lady. Why not Miriam Hopkins, who isn't going on with "The Battle of Angels" on Broadway?

Since Judy Garland has been named one of the ten best, Rooney calls her "Princess"—but she still calls him "Champ."

Rob Leonard was interviewing colored children for a big number in "Ziegfeld Girl," noticed a cute little type hanging back, and asked the child's father what was wrong. Papa said, "Samba's in disgrace—he's got a black eye."

Rouben Mamoulian missed a good bet when he was in Mexico City filming a bull fight for "Blood and Sand." While the fight was going strong, a fire broke out in the reserved seats, and Rouben ordered his crew to take the cameras and get out, supposing the crowd would do likewise. But they just moved out of danger and stayed on!

I received my first invitation from the White House to be present at the Inauguration on Monday, and now can't go because of my radio show. I'll be doing that when they're doing it.

Someone said that "The Flame of New Orleans" was the house of all nations. Director Rene Clair is French, Marlene Dietrich, German, Roland Young, English and Clarence Muse is—well, don't you know? An American, and a swell actor.

Joan Blondell and Dick Powell are making "Model Wife," but never go to the studio or leave together. Her makeup takes at least an hour and a half longer, and by the time she gets home, Dick is lolling about in an easy chair.

There are some here who don't forget, and Director Eddie Ludwig is one of them. Nils Asther has just been signed for "The Man Who Lost Himself," with Ray Francini and Brian Aherne. And it came, I'm happy to report, from an item in this column. Which shows Hollywood isn't so bad after all, but once a while they need to be reminded.

Wynn Rocomora told a personality waitress in Sardi's she should be in pictures. "I've tried," said she, "but I'm a TOO girl. I'm either too old, too young, too fat, too thin, too blonde, too brunette, too pretty or too homely—but I'm never too tired to carry a tray, and here I stay."

Horace Heidt has signed up Mimi Cabanne, niece of Director Christy Cabanne, with his band, and will take her East with him. She has a lovely voice, has been knocking around Hollywood for two years trying to get somebody to listen to it. Horace listened.

Stars have been talking about a Little Theater here for years, but I really believe it will be Sinclair Lewis who will put it over. You know he's dying to act, and is signing up the leading authors to back our Little Theater movement, for after all, the play's the thing.

Louella O. Parsons' Close-Ups and Long-Shots of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Jan. 21 (INS).—The first little girl to walk into our hearts since Shirley Temple captivated the world in "Little Miss Marker" is Carolyn Lee, aged five. The irresistible child was taken back to Ohio, after she played in "Honeymoon in Bali."

PARSONS her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Warren Copp, who couldn't see a movie career for their little girl. But Y. Frank Freeman never stopped urging the Cops, who are in comfortable circumstances, to reconsider. Finally they relented and Carolyn appeared in "Virginia" for Edward H. Griffith. Now she has been signed to an exclusive contract and every effort will be used to try and get stories similar to the ones Shirley made during her most successful days.

How long ago it seems since Wallace Berry made "Viva Villa" in Mexico and Lee Tracy's capers attracted such attention. Nobody ever knew just what happened, but after "Viva Villa" no American film company went there on location. Conditions now have changed and the ban has been lifted. Paramount has already sent a location company to Mexico for exteriors for "For Whom the Bell Tolls" and Twentieth Century-Fox has shot additional scenes for "Blood and Sand" and will soon film another "Cisco Kid" there.

Talked with Marlene Dietrich at the Jack Warners Sunday night and she told me she had spent the entire day at Joe von Sternberg's ranch being photographed. Marlene says Joe has the most amazing collection of cameras and that she considers him the world's finest photographer. He felt that Marlene had not been photographed properly in still pictures so he took 50 or more poses with, she said, a new camera that is set up like an X-ray.

Chatter in Hollywood: Gene Tierney is a very peevish young lady and the object of her displeasure is none other than Rudy Vallee. In spite of stories to the contrary that they were this place or that place together, Gene swears she's never met Rudy and blames the publicity on his press agent.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: The Barbara Hutton von Reventlow dance Saturday night was like an old time Hollywood party before the town got so big. Everyone had such a good time none made a move to leave until nearly 4 o'clock. Cary Grant and Connie Moore took time out to look at their birthday presents, which ranged from a monkey on a hand organ and a silly rag doll to expensive gifts.

Talked with Tallulah Bankhead and she told me she plays 87 more times—many one-night stands before she finishes "The Little Foxes." She is on the wagon, having vowed not to touch liquor until England wins the war. Marlene Dietrich created a sensation when she walked in wearing a dress from her picture, "Lady From New Orleans"—an 1840 creation with her hair piled on top of her head in the fashion of that era. Hedy Lamarr spent her time between John Howard and Reginald Gardiner, who was in great form as usual. Countess di Frasso, her foot in a cast, held court from the sofa all evening. I had seen Virginia Zuck and Gene Tierney at the Brenda Joyce-Owen Ward marriage ceremony just a few hours earlier. We came on to the party from the wedding. Rosalind Russell, dancing with Freddy Brissson, called over his shoulder to me, "we're not engaged" and being a lady I didn't want to say "I don't believe you." That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons
New York, Jan. 21.

ED FLYNN: This is a story which concerns Evie Robert, whose husband, Chip Robert, was secretary of the National Democratic Committee. . . . When the President appeared at the National Women's Press Club this month—an event which attracted much attention, because he had absented himself from the Gridiron Dinner a few days earlier—he was asked to sign the guest book. Eleanor Roosevelt then was asked to sign, and she wrote her autograph four lines underneath the President's. The club was so proud of having this remarkable record of the Chief Executive and the First Lady that the autographed page was ordered set in a gold frame. It was shown to Evie Robert, who impulsively signed her name between those of Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt. . . . The distraught officers thereupon phoned the Library of Congress and secured the services of the best ink eradicator there to obliterate Mrs. Robert's name.

SENATOR WHEELER: Although you and Verne Marshall are objecting to being included in the March of Time's newest release, "Uncle Sam, the Non-Belligerent," Representative Vito Marcantonio is satisfied with his being co-opted. . . . BWAY ASSN: Jack Dempsey is waiving the provision of his separation agreement with Hannah Williams which banned her from working in any night clubs. . . . WILLIAM GREEN: Ralph Whitehead, whose actors' federation almost caused a slump of the entertainment industry in America two years ago, now is in Florida organizing the dog tracks. . . . GEN. MARSHALL: Carl Lasmille, Jr., is too short to be a test pilot, but wants to do his duty. Dorothy Parker suggested that he fight for inclusion in the draft, on the grounds that he has rising arches.

LOU NOVA: Billy Conn has been offered $5,000 to appear in a movie by Republic Pictures. The handsome Conn, who goes to the movies twice a day, told the story. . . . MUSICIANS UNION: Teddy Powell, the band leader, has had his draft number called. He told the board that he was claiming 17 dependents—the members of his orchestra. "Don't worry," the board assured him. "We'll take them, too." . . . AL JOLSON: Eddie Cantor can't take over your role in "Here We Go Again." Eddie has a new musical planned, with Fred Astaire as costar. The plot concerns Cantor's inability to tell the truth and Astaire's inability to lie.

BMI: The current radio battle has resulted in a new idea for song plugging. A thousand military-band orchestras have been made of Cole Porter's "Let's Be Buddies" and distributed to Army posts throughout the country. Porter is supervising the making of lantern slides of the song's lyrics. . . . SIGNAL CORPS: The British army provided a special car for Sir Harry Lauder with which he could tour the army camps. A special bugle call was written for him, so that when the soldiers would hear it they'd know Lauder was coming to entertain them. But the bugle call was eliminated, because it brought not only the congregation of soldiers but also two air raids. . . . EDITOR, MANUAL OF ARMS: Jimmy and Elliott Roosevelt wore their uniforms Sunday night and saluted each other.

JOSEPH E. DAVIES: At the Algonquin Saturday afternoon, Louis Nizer saw Mr. and Mrs. John Boettiger and Eleanor Roosevelt. They complimented him upon his book, "Thinking on Your Feet." The author felt embarrassed at this effusive praise and changed the subject: "Are you planning to be in town for a while?" he asked them. . . . "Oh, no," replied Anna Roosevelt Boettiger. "We have to be in Washington on Monday to attend a certain Family Event."

ERNEST W. GIBSON: That German-made movie of the warfare in Poland is being shown privately by "reactionists" to groups of newspaper editors. . . . MAYOR LAGUARDIA: Fred Allen says that your new anti-noise campaign against loud auto horns was initiated because you expect a summons to Washington and want to make sure you'll hear it. . . . MABEL BOLLE: The Tiffany executives held a conference to decide whether a new policy would be advisable—catering more to the general public. As the first step in this direction, they discussed the question of splitting up a $450,000 necklace—into three portions.

HARRY HOPKINS: Jesse Jones, your successor as Secretary of Commerce, last week proved what a practical business man he is. Thursday night he entertained the National Business Advisory Council at a stag dinner. . . . W. Averell Harriman, the former chairman of the council, confessed to the guests that during the past eight years the council had learned more from the people in government than it was able to transmit to them. He added that for eight years also the council had received nothing but a kick in the pants—and that the members therefore were pleased, but still puzzled at the reasons for this dinner. . . . "So Averell is puzzled?" said Jones—who then told Ed Flynn to rise. . . . "Ed," the Secretary of Commerce told the chairman of the National Democratic Committee as he indicated the many wealthy executives present, "here you are, Ed. Here are the boys to take care of your deficit."

Little

Six years ago "Andy Hardy" was playing Puck in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," a transition for Mickey Rooney that is not so startling as it might seem. Others in this Warner Brothers adaptation of the Shakespeare comedy included James Cagney, Olivia de Havilland, Ian Hunter, Joe E. Brown, Jean Muir, Rose Alexander, Verree Teasdale, Hobart Cavanaugh, Grant Mitchell, Hugh Herbert, Frank McHugh, Arthur Treacher, Anita Louise, Victor Jory and Nina Theilade. Max Reinhardt directed. The music was from Mendelssohn, arranged by Erich Wolfgang Korngold. The Little Theater has been thinking of this galaxy of late, has located a print and will offer what they found for a week's run beginning this morning. One of the notable features of this outstanding film has always been the amusement which the original Shakespearean lines brought to its hearers. Danza tried to include the original lines without tampering with them, pleased the scholars at the film's first appearance, but, and far more important, they delighted the audiences for which the picture was created. The fact that the screen could capture many of the scenes of old word pictures were the only previous indications was the finishing touch for the popular success of this adaptation.

The play was arranged for the screen by Charles Kenyon and Mary C. McCall, Jr. William Dieterle codirected with Mr. Reinhardt and the dances were created by Nijinska. Besides the players listed above, the cast further includes over 1,500 others.

Director Finds Name in Film

The art department put Director-Writer Preston Sturges in his own picture "The Lady Eve." To date, Sturges hasn't played a flash in the picture as he did briefly in both "The Great McGinty" and "Christmas in July." He won't have to bother now. His name is to the picture. The art department made up a huge board displaying the Western Hemisphere of the globe and announcing that it was the Pool Bulletin where guests made guesses of how far the ship would travel that day. They added the line: "Yesterday's winner—Preston Sturges."

Drums Over Beauty, Choice of Cooper

Everybody wondered why Jackie Cooper, surrounded by beautiful girls on the "Ziegfeld Girl" set, was so anxious to get away after his scenes had been completed. He was found, later, on the "Men of Boys Town" set, the new Spencer Tracy-Mickey Rooney starring film. The lure was music. Mickey had brought out his drums and various other instruments and, along with the other kids in the cast was having a jive session in his dressing room. Jackie had heard about it and he is as keenly interested in swing as young Rooney. When they kidded him about leaving his own set, he said, "I figure drums are better than glamour any day."

Robert Taylor hasn't received any bid yet from the Municipal Airport at Kings Field, for the watermelon he plowed up when a stiff cross wind caused him to drift off the runway when making a landing there. "CLAUDIA," Rose Franken's own adaptation of her popular novel, "Claudia" and "Claudia and David," opens a pre-Broadway run at the National Theater Monday evening. Dorothy McGuire, seen here in "Our Town" and "My Dear Children," has the title role, while that of her mother will be played by Frances Starr, known to her Washington neighbors as Mrs. R. Golden Donaldson. The stories concerned incidents which befall a young married couple on their Connecticut farm. Donald Cook, last here with Gertrude Lawrence in "Skylark," Olga Baclanova, John Williams, Frank Tweddell, Audrey Ridgwell and Adrienne Gessner complete Producer John Golden's cast. Matinee Wednesday and Saturday.

Back To Uvalde

The amiable and philosophic editor and farmer who is now Vice President takes the place as presiding officer of the Senate of one of the most picturesque figures in our recent legislative history. "Cactus Jack" Garner had become almost an institution on Capitol Hill. His departure for a "year of insulation" at Uvalde, Tex., will leave a void at both ends of the Capitol. Indeed, it is quite probable that many more tears were shed by legislators saying goodbye to Mr. Garner than he let fall in parting with "the Chief," with whom he had so frequently disagreed over national policies.

Mr. Garner's career probably reached its zenith during the brief period when he was Speaker of the House. As the most powerful representative of his party in Congress, he then held spot-light interest that was usually denied him during his eight years as Vice President and presiding officer in the Senate. Long before he attained the Speakership he had helped to force reform of the House rules and thus made it a more democratic body. He had won the respect of other legislators for his persistence and hard work as well as for his political shrewdness.

The ruddy-cheeked Texan never emerged as a great statesman. Nevertheless he has been a power on Capitol Hill and his name will lend color to the legislative history of the 38 years in which he has served his country in Congress. So, as Mr. Garner retires to Uvalde, he carries the good wishes of the American people with him. And if his preoccupation with rod and rifle is not always wholly satisfying, he may find additional consolation in the fact that he is one of many aspirants to the Presidency who have failed because the times have demanded men of other training and temperament.

Confusion Over Rights

The invalidation of Pennsylvania's alien registration act seems to be a case of a desirable objective reached by a questionable means. There is not much to be said for State action in the field of alien control. As Justice Black pointed out in the majority opinion handed down by the Supreme Court, legislation affecting aliens has an immediate bearing upon our foreign relations. Moreover, Congress controls naturalization and immigration. Orderly government plainly calls for abandonment of local alien registration requirements when Congress sets up a national system.

From this premise the Supreme Court logically concluded that Federal law in the field of alien registration is supreme. "Any concurrent State power that may exist," wrote Justice Black, "is restricted to the narrowest limits." But the opinion did not end there. It went on to assume that Congress has "manifested a purpose" to set up one uniform national registration system and that therefore the Pennsylvania statute could not be enforced.

As a practical matter the superiority of one alien registration law over numerous different State systems is not open to question. Justice Stone wrote a dissenting opinion, however. His ground, concurred in by Chief Justice Hughes and Justice McReynolds, is that the exercise of police powers by the States should not be upset by the court merely for the sake of obtaining uniformity. "At a time when the exercise of the Federal power is being rapidly expanded through Congressional action," Justice Stone wrote, "it is difficult to overstate the importance of safeguarding against such diminution of State power by vague influences as to what Congress might have intended if it had considered the matter or by reference to our own conceptions of a policy which Congress has not expressed and which is not plainly to be inferred from the legislation which it has enacted."

The Pennsylvania act was passed before Congress undertook to legislate on this subject. It was based on the fact that, while Congress controls immigration, aliens once here are subject to State police powers. It does not conflict with any treaty or with the Federal statute. The dissenting justices believe that its enforcement would have been no more incompatible with the Federal registration plan than is the simultaneous collection of Federal and State income taxes.

In any event, these opinions emphasize once more the existence of controversy in high places over the powers which may be legally exercised by the States and the Federal Government. As a result of the present confusion, States encroach upon fields of control which should be left to the national authority, and the Government at Washington steadily widens its powers at the expense of local home rule. It is unreasonable to expect that all of these questions can be ironed out satisfactorily through judicial decisions. What is needed is a thorough study of the entire problem of State-Federal relationships in an effort to point the way to a mutually satisfactory reallocation of controversial functions in line with present-day realities.

Britain's Future

The kind of Britain that will emerge after victory becomes of more than usual interest now that we are thinking of underwriting her war effort. Two American attitudes are in conflict. There is a hope in the White House that the British will mobilize themselves behind the "four human freedoms" in a sort of universal and socialist New Deal. Perhaps part of Mr. Hopkins' assignment is to smoke out any such war or peace aims which may be in the embryonic stage in London. Another attitude is that socialism is bound to come, and that in the process freedom itself will be lost.

Now liberty, as Montesquieu observed, is the word for Britain. The spate of liberty in London's Hyde Park, the paradise for anybody with an idea for knocking down Britain's free institutions, has to be seen to be believed. As to the fear that the war will kill free speech in Britain, this is controverted almost daily in reports from Britain. Only a few weeks ago the House of Commons gave an example that debate is still free and unlimited by spending almost a day in discussing and decisively defeating a motion for a negotiated peace with Germany. And two recent conferences within the last two weeks testify that this was no tableau put on for the benefit of cisatlantic doubters. One was a people's convention inspired by the Communist Party; another a pacifist conference. One may wonder whether Britain has left the backdoor unbarred for Moscow while barricading the front door against Berlin. One may marvel that pacifists in Britain are just as invincible in wartime as in peacetime. One may feel amazed that there is so much dispersion in the national energies when a world fit for visions to grow in is under such terrific assault. The point is that, in spite of all the wartime restraints on the statute book, Britain is enjoying freedom even more freely.

What is in the offing is that the government seems likely to continue to spend a goodly share of the national income. At present the government spending is for war purposes. After the war the government will doubtless be an equally lavish spender on reconstruction. And that reconstruction will have to be borne by such socialist devices as a capital levy. (Even conservative economists nowadays feel that a capital levy should have been voted after the World War). In this Britain there seems bound to be few rich men and fewer opportunities either to get or stay rich. If there is any other way to pay for reconstruction, doubtless the reconstruction chancellor of the exchequer would be glad to know of it, and to give it any kind of a tag so long as it yields the revenue.

A yardstick is required in this airy-fairy discussion on what kind of democracy, if any, will be left in a victorious Britain. Democracy in its essence, as we see it, is freedom to change one's government. Surely the logic of the blood and toil and tears is that in this respect democracy in Britain is as secure as anything can be secure in this insecure world. However, our concern in underwriting the British would be to secure our own defense against an ordering of the world contrary to our national interests.

Break Or Make

Senator O'Mahoney's criticism of the Aluminum Co. is another reminder that while one group of Government officials is working in cooperation with the corporation's representatives, the Department of Justice is prosecuting the company as a violator of the antitrust laws, and seeking its dissolution. The burden of Senator O'Mahoney's complaint seems to be that there had been more competition in the past, the country would today have greater facilities for producing and fabricating aluminum. That is an assumption incapable of proof. Moreover, whether true or false, it is immaterial from the standpoint of defense officials who have to deal with the aluminum trust and enlist its cooperation in the important work of supplying an indispensable metal.

In these circumstances it seems a dubious proceeding to press a suit to secure dissolution of the company into a number of separate and independent corporations. It may be that such dissolution is justified, if the charges advanced by the Government can be substantiated. Certainly there is no questioning the vast power exercised by this company as the sole producer of raw aluminum for many years. Recently, however, the RFC agreed to finance the construction of a competing production unit which will begin operations this year. Moreover, the expediting of the defense program is for the time being more important to the country than the work of breaking up a large corporate organization that has been permitted to exist for many years. As Undersecretary of War Patterson said recently, "There is only one job in the country, and that is defense."

Duce And Fuehrer

"Since the first Hitler-Mussolini meeting, seven years ago, there has been a complete change in the relations of the Italian and German dictators. In 1934 Mussolini was definitely on top. This was proved when, after the abortive Nazi putsch in Vienna when Engelbert Dollfuss was killed, he mobilized a large Italian force on the Brenner, thereby preventing Germany from intervening in Austria. In 1934 Mussolini was still able to keep his German disciple in line.

The situation today is altogether different. Mussolini is no longer Hitler's superior, or even his equal, but only a vassal grateful for whatever German crumbs are thrown to him from the master's table. Without German military and economic assistance, Italy is doomed. By the same token the junior partner of the Axis is in no position to make any material contribution to the victory, which, inspired German and Italian commentators insist, will come this year.

The latest meeting of Hitler and Mussolini, which took place sometime over the last week-end, and at an unnamed place, is not on that account to be discounted, however. There can be no doubt that it contains ominous possibilities for the British. For the very fact that Italy has during recent months suffered a succession of heavy blows at the hands of the Greeks and British, and that the United States is bestirring itself to render large-scale aid to the British, make it all the more necessary for the Axis to win, and win quickly. Where Hitler will strike, whether in the Balkans, the Mediterranean, Gibraltar, Ireland or elsewhere, is not at all clear. That he will strike somewhere soon can almost be taken for granted. But the decision is up to him. To be sure, the belated communique issued in Berlin following the meeting of the dictators declared that "it resulted in complete agreement of mutual opinions on all questions." In other words, Mussolini said "yes." Which is now all he can do in his dealings with Hitler.

Love On Ice

Maybe it isn't nice to throw cold water, but it does seem that even a skating star would feel a chill around the heart at the idea of falling in love to beat a deadline. That, however, is just what Vera Hrubá has got to do. Her permit to visit the United States expires March 1. Miss Hrubá said two years ago that if Hitler took the rest of her native Czechoslovakia she wouldn't go back, so that's out. About the only thing left to do is marry an American. Thus far, however, that little heart has just refused to budge. There was a man from Boston who followed her around, and another in Washington. But, she says, "I just could not marry someone I did not love very much." Cupid can't be compelled, it's true, but still there's time, and there must be talent in the country that hasn't yet been applied to this problem. How about some of you smooth Southerners or great big outdoor men from the West? This is no advertisement, but this beautiful blonde will be cutting dices on the ice January 28 to February 9 with the show that opens a local rink. So, won't you boys see what you can do? We don't want Vera to be deported, do we?

Work For Negroes

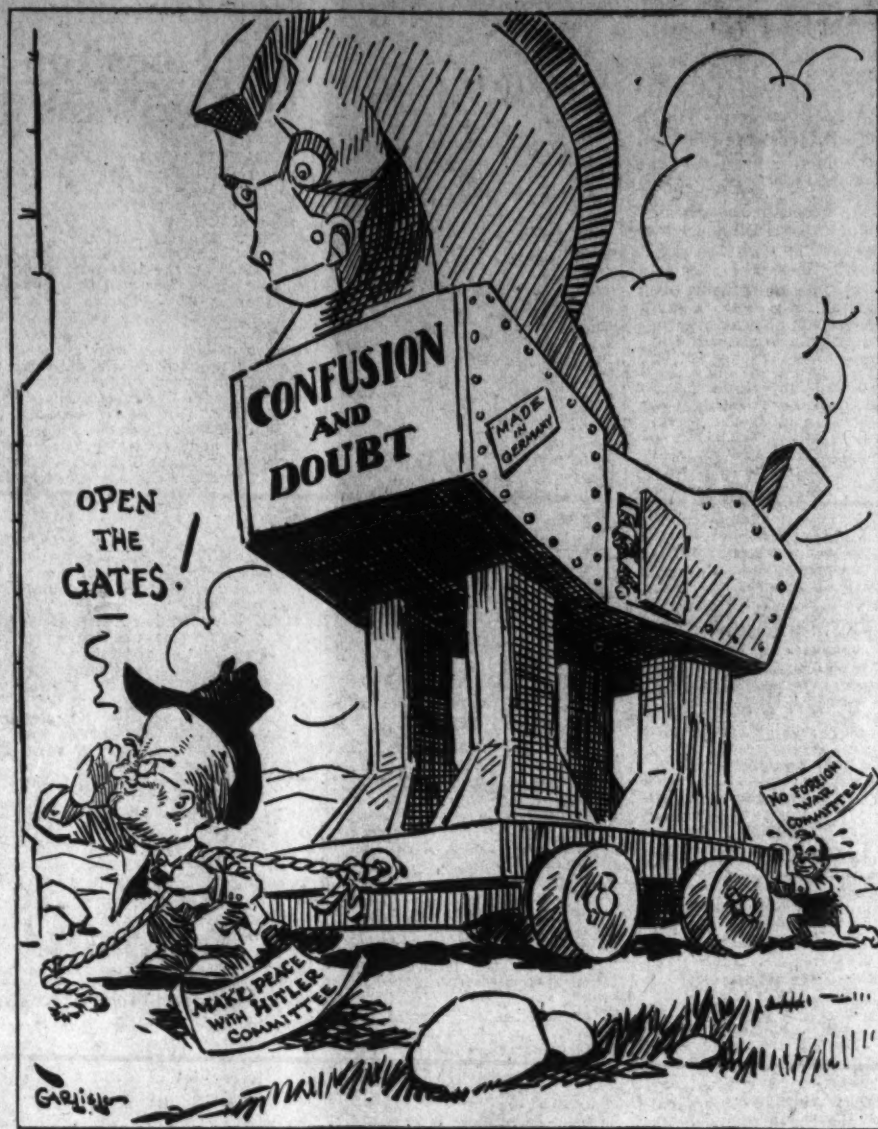

Washington's branch of the National Urban League is now conducting an annual membership drive in the hope of attracting wider support for its effort to deal constructively with the problems of Washington's Negro population. At present the emphasis is being placed chiefly upon the necessity for new and more varied employment openings for Negroes. Over 200 skilled Negro workers have been placed in national defense jobs, and a branch of the Postal Telegraph system has been established in the heart of the colored community, the third of its kind in the country. The league also hopes to open up a more diversified field of work for Negroes by establishing better and more direct contacts between Negro work applicants and white employers hiring labor through the District Employment Exchange. It is likewise concerned with investigating cases of alleged unfair treatment of Negroes who have qualified for civil service positions. Indubitably the provision of more and better paid jobs is one of the surest ways of improving health, cutting relief costs, reducing delinquency, and providing a generally better environment in which colored residents of this city can lead happier lives and make a greater contribution to the community.

FOR A TOO LOVELY LADY

Not for your beauty will the planets halt
To stare from heaven, or the boughs moon.
Nor will the sun stand motionless in the noon.
Time will not prove them guilty of a fault.
Who looked upon you and before to swoon,
Who would not wreck the heavens to exalt
Your shining excellence. The long assault
Of years will prove them wise, alas, too soon.

Letters To The Editor

Simplify Traffic Rules

I have been much interested in the comments, editorially and through the letter from readers, regarding the automobile accidents that have been growing more frequent since the first of the year.

Perhaps I have missed something. But so far I have failed to see any comment that does not place the cart before the horse. There is talk of changing school and Government department hours; talk of reviving a civilian organization of spies; talk of police conferences, and of law enforcement. Talk about everything under the sun except the real cause for the increasing number of accidents.

My solution would be to have a good traffic man go over the traffic laws, rules and regulations, throw out those which are bad, and revise the whole scheme of things. If this were done, the rest would be easy.

Nowhere else have I found such a hodge-podge of rules and laws. Nowhere else such poor light control situation. Nowhere else such poor vision in control of traffic. (It should be understood in these criticisms, that I do not know who are the men in control of the situation, and that nothing personal is intended.) Nowhere else have I found so many laws and such poor enforcement, as I have found in Washington.

An elaborate system of inspection of cars has been set up. But, the other day, a car with poor brakes was allowed to go out on the streets, under a red tag. When the driver wanted to make an emergency stop, the red tag did not help, and a man was killed. In other cities under similar conditions, that car would have had to be towed away from the inspection station, and could not have been operated until repairs were made satisfactorily.

There is no synchronization, nor rhythm in the control of lights. The timing is exceptionally poor. There are many places in the city where a slight change in conditions would result in a better flow of traffic, yet these have existed for months without anyone in control finding them. There are confusing rules in many parts of the city. There are rules which are rigid in one place and a couple of blocks away, because of the same rules, traffic piles up, but no one seems to understand that. There is one particularly sore spot where buses make a left-handed turn, but there is no left-turn light, and any day one can see many near collisions. There are other left-handed turns with wrong type lights. All of these things slow traffic, and cause confusion and accidents.

No, Mr. Editor, don't talk about law enforcement and conferences and spies. Rather, talk about traffic direction and control that is simple, sensible and systematic. When you achieve that, you will have corrected most of the evils that exist in Washington.

Let the horse get back in front. Start with the cause of it all, and make necessary changes, whether they be of men, laws or regulations.

Denies We Need Void Treaties In Crisis

The supreme law of the United States is comprised in the sovereign legislative acts called treaties, and the impromptu proposal that any of these be ignored in the immediate universal crisis is injudicious and in conflict with the Constitution.

The contention that we must abandon the law of nations and our solemn international engagements in respect of neutrality so that we might with less impediment assist the peoples who are threatened with political extermination by powers that respect no treaty, law or right is most unsound and goes against the Government's immemorial practice, which is only apparently, and not actually, departed from in our present determination to assure, to the limit of our resources, the definite defeat of the outlaws.

Better might we maintain that the treaties and the law are sustained in their complete integrity, and that the rights guaranteed by them are forfeited by, not denied to, Germany, which was a party to the treaties, and to that nation's skullduggery and companies. Germany is excluded by her present government from the comity of nations, if legal precepts be observed, and morally is entitled to claim no rights of any sort.

Our Government is constitutionally prohibited to call any treaties void, and in the interest of the law-abiding parties to such conventions the Government is tacitly committed to enforce power or camp of powers that wages a lawless war against treaties, law and civilization. The duty of America is to continue to evince and to respect the treaties, and to deem that the protection provided by treaties may not be pleased by governments engaging in the practice of piracy.

The undeviating position of the Supreme Court from the beginning was, and is, that a treaty is not subject to judicial interpretation. Congress cannot constitutionally act in contravention of a treaty.

Construction of a treaty by the Government is final. When nations cease to exist, treaties in respect of them and simultaneously, and when a living nation proclaims an intention to demolish the established laws and society of nations, that nation can constitutionally, and must morally, be condemned by our Government, and be adjudged to forfeit each treaty and legal right. A government with which no peace can be negotiated except to sacrifice the rights of men and of nations and to recognize as if forever the right of the arbitrary force of one power to dominate the oceans and the continents, cannot be recognized as possessing any legal standing. Protests from such a government would be as sound as any slaver's complaints that the forces of law interfered with his nefarious commerce.

No power exists that can refute or challenge a pronouncement by our Government that, by reason of acts designed to level the society of nations and actually to replace that society's foundations, the German government, which continues to regard treaties as instruments to assist aggression as snares for just nations, is decreed to be outside the pale, not beyond the bar, of that society, and so to possess no just claim to any rights rising from treaties with the United States and such decision would be proclaimed to be forced by the total lawlessness of the German government whose only results could be to vitiate that government's treaty relations with the United States, and to annul Germany's rights deriving from international law while that power is warring against the society of nations. The interests of America and of the nations require no denunciation of treaties by our Government. We are for energizing, not entangling, law, and our contribution to the race, instead of dissolution, is building for the future.

"Welcome, Chileans!"

In the January 19 issue of The Post is an editorial entitled "Welcome, Chileans!" in which a rather unique venture for this country is discussed. The Post gives credit to Ambassador Bowers for the suggestion that a number of Chile's outstanding journalists visit the United States as guests of American newspapers.

May I commend both Ambassador Bowers and The Post for their part in this venture? There has been too much talk and too little action in regard to our "good neighbor" policy. We must be specific, and the newspapers which make possible this particular enterprise are doing a fine service to their country.

The Columbia Broadcasting System has also launched a most significant venture in establishing a network of 25 stations in South America. That network is more important than a half dozen military bases.

I know that the newspapers which have invited Chile's journalists to this country will extend similar courtesy to other South American countries. May I express the hope that out of this effort may grow a strong group of Ibero-American papers which will defend our common political ideals. The Post, which is most favorably known in every country to the South of us, is in an excellent position to foster such an enterprise.

Efficient Enforcement

I am heartily in accord, as are all thinking people, with your campaign relative to the traffic conditions in Washington. May I make one suggestion, however, and that is that there is no use in calling for an additional number of traffic officers when those now on duty do not enforce the regulations. An observer at any large intersection will see many violations, such as driving out of line, making turns from the wrong lane, etc., which are countenanced by the officer who is supposed to be controlling traffic, and which get by without any protest from him. It is obvious that exhibitions of this kind breed a contempt for the traffic regulations in general which is reflected in more serious breaches of the law where there are no officers to see them. Let's make the present enforcement of traffic regulations more efficient before we talk about getting additional officers.

Drunk Driving

Having lived in Washington for five years and having an interest in our National Capital, I have been not a little concerned about the city's traffic problems as indicated in the columns of your paper. While commend every laudable effort to crack down on speeders, drunks and reckless drivers, I think that most of the discussion, especially as to drunk driving, has missed the mark. In this respect practically every criticism has been aimed at the drunk drivers, without putting the finger on the sore spot. Practically no criticism has been applied to the Federal or District Governments for licensing the liquor "rent-a-cars" which are at the bottom of the trouble.

Why not reduce the temptations and opportunities to drink? Then there would be a lessening of drunk driving. Why sell a driver liquor and then crack down on him or her without attacking the real source of such trouble? The thing to do is to stop putting the car before the horse and to put the horse before the car. ED. J. RICHARDSON.

Friends From Home

YOU UNDERSTAND it's nothing personal against these people. It's just that the role of official guide for friends from "back home" is wearying. Got a wire from the Greenwells, who have been enjoying themselves down in Florida, that they would arrive in Washington day after tomorrow and would I please meet them. Now back in my home town the Greenwells were people I knew not too well, though they did belong to the same church as my family. However, since I came to Washington I have noticed that people of slight acquaintance back home become your very cordial friends when they arrive here, especially if you have a home with a guest room and a car.

I know the routine very well. I'll meet the Greenwells day after tomorrow. Thank the Lord my friend is still staying with me this week—that will be an excuse for not asking the Greenwells to stay with me. The Greenwells don't know Washington so I'll have to recommend a hotel, something very nice but reasonable, you know, about $2.50 for a double room. That, according to the standards of the small town back home, would be a comfortable room, but what do you get here for that? They would like to be close to where I live so that I can conveniently drop them at their hotel since they don't want to impose on me at all but you know these buses and street cars are so confusing and the taxis just cost a fortune if you use them much. After I get the Greenwells settled in a hotel room at about the price they will pay—although it is plain they don't think so much of it—they then inquire what I would suggest they do.

Since they notified me two days in advance, they expect me to have made plans for them. It's been no trouble, I've done this before. I have to work the following day being a week day, so I advise them that they should take some of the conducted tours. The price staggers them a bit but you can see that they think "Well, it's once in a lifetime." They see the embassies, the Monument, the Lincoln Memorial and the Smithsonian. They look in at J. Edgar Hoover's place, Ford's Theater, Senate and House of Representatives, Supreme Court Building and Library of Congress.

The tour is over, so what to do? "Let's go to the movies" and that evening Mr. Greenwell is full of talk about the stage show. "They have them every week, do they?" he queries. I meet the Greenwells at the hotel about five and we drive down to Maine Avenue. The Greenwells don't know whether they like the smell of salt water, fish and other odors peculiar to that part of town but they do enjoy their sea food dinners very much. Mr. Greenwell very obviously insists I consider myself their dinner guest which is a noble gesture. Cynically I reflect they will get their money back before they leave. After dinner, no, they don't believe they want to go to the National. Mrs. Greenwell brightly says as if she had just that minute thought of it "Let's go see the Allens. They live just at Falls Church, and I'd dearly love to see them." Since the Greenwells are nervous about using the dial telephones, I call the Allens, paying for the call. I'm beginning to pay back for the dinner, you see. We have a lukewarm time at the Allens and the Greenwells feel rather let down. As we drive back to Washington we stop at the airport for a bit and Mr. Greenwell gets some dust in her eyes when one of the planes revs up and she gets back into the car. "Come on, let's go," she says impatiently, so we do. I know the folks are expecting something different so we drop in at one of the new Bavarian places. The sing fest is in full swing. We all order beer, although Mrs. Greenwell tilts her nose up a peg or two and they begin to enjoy themselves although looking very superior and rather uncomfortable. They certainly have never seen or heard the like. I can already see the way Mrs. Greenwell will relish telling about it at the next guild meeting.

Next day being Saturday I take the morning off. We look in on our Congressman and by his manner I knew he doesn't recognize the Greenwells at all but he makes hearty talk and gives them that firm political handshake and personal smile and the Greenwells swell with importance and pride. We visit the National Cathedral and the Zoo. I'm sure the animals realize how precious are the peanuts Mr. Greenwell throws at them. They get one apple, he eats the rest. He isn't very hungry when we stop for a sandwich and coffee en route to Annapolis. I "treat" them, as I was their guest the evening before. "Now, we are certainly square," I think.

Annapolis is all right, they think, but the brackish odor makes Mrs. Greenwell anxious to leave. We get back at about 3. Their train leaves at 8:15. By this time the Greenwells are hungry but they don't want to pay for my dinner and I am sure I won't for theirs. I have an errand and see their railway. At 7 I pick them up at their hotel and uneventfully see them off. Mrs. Greenwell gushes her thanks, you'd say, and goodbye. As a drive home I think "Bet I get a box of dusting powder or bath salts she won't at bingo." I'm not so far wrong—I get some toilet water.

On The Record

By Dorothy Thompson

Mr. Kennedy Vs. Mr. Kennedy

IT SEEMED TO ME, in reading Mr. Kennedy's speech last week, that he had out-Hamletted Hamlet, for instead of posing the question, "To be or not to be," he managed to make it, "To be and not to be." In a word, the speech could have pleased Senator Wheeler—if he had listened to only part of it—and satisfied the President if he had heard only another part of it.

Mr. Kennedy, for instance, said: "If I am called an appeaser because I oppose the entrance of this country into this war, then I cheerfully plead guilty." This sneer campaign is particularly violent against many of our citizens who want the influence of this country to be used for peace. They believe that as long as this war continues there is the probability that we ourselves will become involved, bringing ruin to our civilization and an end to our democratic form of life.

Because, in addition to wishing to rid Britain, the American people want to stay out of war, this aid should not go to the point where war becomes inevitable. In spite of the fact that the conquest of the British Isles would give Hitler domination of Europe.

"I hope that I am not too optimistic when I express confidence that we in America can successfully defend ourselves."

For the life of me, I cannot understand why the tale of a great military machine 3,000 miles away should make us fear for our security.

BUT MR. KENNEDY also said:

"If by the word appeaser . . . it is charged that I advocate a deal with the dictators, contrary to British desire, or that I advocate placing any trust in their (the German) promises, the charge is false and malicious. The word of these tyrants has been shown to be worthless. They themselves proclaim that their promises are sham. . . . A just peace at this moment does not appear to be in the cards. To all the world he has proclaimed that he, Hitler, wages total war for a new world order . . . where our society of justice according to law cannot even exist." . . . Nearly all the American people want to aid Britain. . . . I favor the utmost aid. . . . By helping Britain we will be securing ourselves the most precious commodity we need—time—time to rearm. It, and God forbid, England were to be defeated quickly and the German succeeded to the British navy, this country is not prepared to defend its own shores, let alone the North Atlantic.

No one will seriously urge that we should give beyond the absolute minimum requirement for our protection. Where that line is to be drawn is to be determined by the President, acting with our trained experts of the Army and Navy. "They know best what we can spare."

All of us want very much to see destroyed once and for all the attempted decivilization of the world in the name of pagan Nazi philosophy. . . . Frankly, I can be assured that America, unprepared as she now is, could, by declaring war on Germany, within the space of say a year, and the threat of German domination, I would be in favor of declaring war right now."

Space permits me to take only a few excerpts from Mr. Kennedy's open forum of the air, in which Mr. Kennedy debated Mr. Kennedy.

The important things to remember about the speech are the circumstances, and apparently, the purpose for which it was made. Mr. Kennedy spoke in connection with the bill, now being discussed before the committee of Congress, to give the President power to quote Mr. Kennedy above, again—to decide where the line is to be drawn in sending aid to Britain. Mr. Kennedy said it ought to be "determined by the President, acting with our trained experts of the Army and Navy. They know best what we can spare."

TO GIVE THE President that power, to unify, that is to say, the command and control of policy vis-a-vis Britain and the rest of the world, is the sole purpose of the bill now being debated. The advantages are obvious; advantages of speed, coordination, secrecy, and integration. The disadvantages—of delay, confusion, and the certain influencing policy by organized groups in this country including all the Fifth Columnists—are also obvious, one would think.

If every move we make is to be subjected to all the cross-currents of Congress, debated before the whole world, and delayed in the debating, we shall not do anything effectively. Furthermore, the very lag in passing the bill is holding up action that might be effective tomorrow and ineffective a week from now.

YET, UNDER the guise of presenting impartially both sides of the question, Mr. Kennedy urged that the bill should not be passed, because the situation was not yet serious enough to call for it, although if Mr. Kennedy's speech proved anything, whether he spoke as this or as that, it proved that the situation is as serious as it can possibly be. For though he would like the speaker, he said categorically, that from his observation, peace was impossible; that though he was confident that if we armed quickly enough we could defend our shores, we are not prepared to defend them now or soon; that, although Germany lies 3,000 miles away, Hitler wages total war for a new world order, that although the people should be kept aware of how tragic war would be, he would be in favor of declaring war this moment if he was sure that Germany could be defeated quickly; and that although he believed the President and the Army and Navy experts were the most competent authorities to decide the form of that aid, they should not be given that authority.

SO IT SEEMS to me, Mr. Kennedy, having taken a vote in his own mind under a system of proportional representation, balances at zero.

Hamlet was a little clearer in his mind. But it must be recalled that the net effect of Hamlet's long debate with himself was that he finally killed poor old Polonius, instead of the real enemy of Denmark, drove his love to suicide, and bought the King's death only by his own.

And Denmark was invaded, in the end. That, you recall, is the final curtain.

Darden's resignation, already submitted to Gov. James H. Price, is effective March 1.

"I beg leave to inform you," Darden wrote the Speaker, "that I have this day transmitted to the Governor of Virginia my resignation, effective March 1, 1941, as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the Second District of Virginia."

"I am leaving Congress with pleasant memories of a warm friendship which I hope will continue through the years."

The letter was dated January 17.

Neglected Metal

By Ernest K. Lindley

Need For Magnesium

A PLANT which will make 12,000 tons of pig magnesium annually is about to be built near Palo Alto, Calif.

This is big news concerning national defense. Magnesium is extremely light. Two pounds of it will do the work of three pounds of aluminum. The Germans are using vast quantities of magnesium in their airplanes, and for bomb casings and other war purposes.

But magnesium has been a neglected metal in the United States. Until now there has been only one American producer of pig magnesium—the Dow Chemical Co. In 1938 it made 2,400 tons, of which about one-third was exported. Part of the exports went to Germany. In the same year Germany produced 12,000 tons.

In 1940 we produced 6,000 tons (at a maximum estimate), and Germany between 50,000 and 75,000 tons.

Next year the present American producer expects to turn out 12,000 tons, double the 1940 output. The new plant in California, managed by new interests and using a different process, expects to start out operating at twice the 1940 capacity of the industry. Its capacity can be increased as fabricators can handle the metal and as airplane manufacturers and other consumers adjust their designs to its use.

WHY AMERICAN magnesium production has been so pitifully small is a long and unpleasant controversial subject. Thurman Arnold's Anti-Trust Division of the Department of Justice is now unfolding the tale in grand jury proceedings. Murky suspicions of monopolistic practice and international intrigue surround the whole business.

The use of magnesium for structural purposes was developed in Germany as far back as 1915. The Aluminum Co. of America became interested in magnesium several years later. Magnesium, for many purposes, is an alternative—and a superior one—to aluminum.

In 1931 the Aluminum Co. of America and the German I. G. Farbenindustrie entered into an agreement to exploit in this country the patents of both groups through the Magnesium Development Co. Prior to that Farben had threatened the Dow Chemical Co. with patent suits. Dow entered into a licensing agreement with the Magnesium Development Co.

The result was that Dow became the sole producer of pig magnesium and licensed the fabricators.

Dow extracts magnesium from sea-water and from the brine deposits at Midland, Mich.

THE PRICE of magnesium has been kept at about 3-2 ratio to the monopolistically controlled price of aluminum. Why is one of the points in which the Department of Justice is interested. In passing, it may be noted that aluminum also is, or threatens to become, a bottleneck in our defense.

Meanwhile, there has existed for years another method of producing pig magnesium. Developed by an Austrian, it is known as the Hansing process. It is being used in Korea, and it is believed, in Germany. The ores which exist in abundance in our own West. There is expert testimony to the effect that the Hansing process is cheaper than the one used by Dow.

The new outfit will ship ore from Nevada and process it in California, by the Hansing process, to which they have acquired the rights.

The new group are especially interesting because they are headed by men whose technical and economic views and vision of the future of this country seem to differ from those of many leaders of American industry.

THE KEY MAN is Henry Kaiser, a West Coast contractor, who, in turn, is the key man of the six contractors who built Bonneville Dam and are building most of Grand Coulee Dam, the biggest piece of construction the world has seen.

A year and a half ago the Kaiser group broke the price of cement on the West Coast and saved the Government $1,500,000 on a single project by building their own cement plant. This plant is the biggest in the world, and it is claimed, is so efficient that it operates at one-quarter the labor costs of the average cement plant and one-half the labor cost of the next most efficient plant. This is in spite of the fact that the operators believe in collective bargaining and, they assert, enter into no operations until they have made contracts with bona fide labor unions.

Recently the Kaiser group, partly in collaboration with Todd Shipyards, have gone into shipbuilding. Already they are operating or building 11 shipyards and have contracts for some 200 ships, including 25 destroyers for the U. S. Navy and 60 merchant ships for Great Britain.

The magnesium plant will be put up beside the cement plant about 12 miles outside of Palo Alto. It is important in itself and as a sign that there are enterprisers who look to the future with a confidence and imagination which are not always found among the older hands of American industry who have spent so much of the last several years in taking each other's temperature and damping Roosevelt.

Dire Need For Ships

NOW the inauguration is over, and the Government is again ready to function normally, it is high time to think of harsh realities, and the harsh reality to which every American should give the most careful thought is the outlook for Britain in these next terrible months.

On this vital topic, informed opinion at the War, Navy and State Departments has undergone a gradual change in the last months. During the fall, Britain's ability to withstand the German air onslaught was the primary pre-occupation. Now, although the air danger is still considered very great, the British are generally believed to be able to meet it. And the new pre-occupation is with the threat to Britain's sea lifelines from the combined German air and submarine campaign.

The fact is that the shipping situation is already very serious, and will almost certainly reach the stage of acute crisis in two or three months' time. Its outline is fairly simple.

AT THE VERY heart of the situation is Germany's control of air and naval bases on the French coast. The air bases permit long-range German planes to fly out beyond the British Isles, 500 to 600 miles to sea, and there to spot the incoming convoys. The spotter planes may or may not attack the convoys. Their first duty is to notify the enormous fleet of small submarines, operating from French ports, which lie out in the danger zone. On information supplied by the airman, the convoys are located for the submarines. The submarines then intercept the convoys, follow them until dusk, and when the light is failing come up among them and send their torpedoes right and left into the helpless freighters.

The swift, armed passenger vessels which are now the chief British reliance in convoy work can do little against five or six submarines. They may get one, but if the interception of a convoy is successful, the submarines do more damage than can be done to them.

The German submarine fleet is now so large that during one day in December a total of 45 were known to be at sea. This was high, and probably represented the submarine fleet at the moment when replacements and vessels long in service were simultaneously at work. At present, British shipping losses are comparatively small, since the days are so short and the winter weather so bad that the spotting planes need very good luck to find a big prize. But submarine output still continues—it is believed that the Germans will have 100 this month. And before long, as the days lengthen and the skies clear, the task of the spotting planes will grow terrifyingly easier.

SUCH is the nature of the danger at sea. To meet it, the British must rely chiefly on the strength of their navy and the size of their merchant fleet.

The total of shipping available to Britain since the start of the war, including vessels obtained from allies, purchased or requisitioned from neutrals and requisitioned from enemies, is in the neighborhood of 22,500,000 tons. Since the war started, about 4,500,000 tons have been sent to the bottom by enemy action, and because of the war blackout, another 1,000,000 tons have been lost by maritime disaster. That leaves approximately 17,000,000 tons of shipping now controlled by Britain. British shipyards, as yet untouched by air attack, are working day and night to maintain the British tonnage, but the 1,500,000 tons they can send down the ways each year is no more than a third of the yearly loss at the present rate.

Because of the situation already described, the loss rate is likely to rise cruelly. Meanwhile, although 17,000,000 tons of shipping seems an immense total, the lifeline is even now stretching very thin. One reason is the British African campaign. The troops in Egypt must be supplied. A great part of the navy is in use in the Mediterranean. Vessels carrying supplies to Egypt avoid the dangerous long short Gibraltar route, traveling the long way round the Cape to Suez. The warships in the Mediterranean reduce the number available for convoy duty in the Atlantic.

THEN THE CONVOY system itself gravely reduces the usefulness of tonnage. Ships traveling over 14 knots go unconvoyed. All ships slower than that must accommodate their speed to the speed of the slowest vessels in a group of 20 or 30. Rendezvous also must be kept. Thus, experts estimate that the convoy system cuts shipping efficiency by 50 per cent.

The effect of what has happened to date is to be seen in simple shipment figures. During the summer, American factories were sending 1,000,000 tons of manufactured and scrap steel, for example, to Britain every month. Now, steel shipments are running about 30 per cent less, between 600,000 and 700,000 tons monthly. If the worst is permitted to happen, in fact, the British lifelines may actually snap this spring. Fortunately, it is in this country's power to maintain Britain's lifelines. We can do it by intelligent, economical use of our own merchant marine, under the lease-lend bill, without either repeating the Neutrality Act or sending our war vessels on convoy duty. But if the lend-lease bill is to be endlessly debated, or amended into ineffectiveness, we shall not be ready to act in time.

Fair Enough

The Canines Howl

SOME NIGHTS when the moon is bright the dogs around and about get into the wildest wrangles usually starting with some chance remark by one of them which seemingly could be dismissed as nothing but a harmless crack. But on such nights—and they seem to come in cycles—their tempers flare, and something that the big black one says will call for a snappy retort from a little mutt, and the nondescript pup on the rock will put up his 2 cents, and away they go for hours.

It all has a ring of insincerity when you try to analyze it, as though they were trying to out-clever one another in repartee from a safe distance and under certain well-understood rules which apparently preclude physical contact. For when morning comes, and they are out and around again, the ancient animosities are observed as usual, without the slightest reference to the most insulting remarks of a few hours ago.

THERE IS NOTHING more corny in the tricks and devices of craft than the attempt to translate the thoughts and comments of dogs into human language. It is usually done in pidgin-baby-talk which certainly is inappropriate to the robust nastiness that fills the night on these occasions. I haven't the faintest idea what these dogs really are aroused about, but in tone and the incoherent drift of their wrangles they make me, a columnist, feel self-conscious and embarrassed as soon after a national election.

Some of their angry cries seem to have the ring of "dirty Communist," "labor baiter," "Wall Street lawyer" and "appeaser," but it is impossible to make any sense at all. For two of them will be yelling away in the most ferocious direct debate when a third chimes in with something that might be "yes, and why doesn't Joe Guifey pay his income taxes like the rest of us?" which is cutting, of course, but, after all, a very remote side issue.

THERE IS a grave St. Bernard whose bearing and comments could be likened to those of a shaggy elder statesman, with no selfish political ambition, who interrupts only when the strife becomes unbearably pointless, as though to drop in a wise observation out of long experience.

Though the shrill and angry irrelevances that bounce from ridge to ridge in the bright, cold night, and endlessly on to other ridges, the clamor extends nobody knows how far, his deep voice offers a suggestion, usually rather descendingly, and the others stop for a moment, as though at a loss and rebuked. But then there comes a sharp and aggressive "and, furthermore," from the yellow cocker, and they are all at it again, except the St. Bernard, who goes back to his office in the Senate, so to speak, and withholds himself from the snarling futility of man dispute.

What starts them off, what they settle by their ill-tempered wrangling or why, of a sudden, it seems agreed that the debate is ended, with so many issues still unsettled, no man can know any better than they can know why their people do the like. But certainly many of their comments have the sound of extravagant overstatement, distortion, and petty faultfinding, and you would assume that, after this, certainly many of them could never be friends or even civil to one another again.

I AM ALMOST certain that the name-calling—President Roosevelt, of all persons, once said—is the refuge of the one who had run out of intelligent argument, and there is one disputant whose fierce personalities irresistibly remind me of Mr. Ickes.

Yet, as I say, almost as though the election returns had just come in, there comes a moment when, by common agreement, they fall quiet, not in an instant, of course, but quickly, nevertheless, and just a few voices trying to carry on in distant places a while longer. Receiving no answer, they, too, subside, and peace comes to the hills in the moonlight.

Whatever they say, obviously in the heat of debate, they do not

Hitler And The Conquered Peoples

SIX MONTHS have elapsed since France was crushed under the wheels of the Nazi juggernaut; seven months since Belgium and the Netherlands were overrun; eight months since Norway and Denmark lost their freedom; 16 months since Poland was partitioned; 21 months since the last spark of Czechoslovak independence was snuffed out. And it is almost three years since Austria was swallowed up.

In none of these countries has opposition to Hitler and the Nazi regime been wholly stamped out. In some of them, particularly Norway and the Netherlands, the spirit of resistance appears to be growing. In all of them acts of sabotage and obstruction have been and are being committed. But nowhere in German Europe has any popular uprising taken place.

THE REASON why none of the captive peoples of the Third Reich has risen in rebellion against the conquerors is obvious. The conquerors are wholly disarmed; the conquerors are not only in possession of the instruments of force but have again and again demonstrated their readiness to act with unmitigated brutality against those who cross their will. Bare hands and bitter hearts are no match against machine guns and tanks and dive bombers.

That is why we cannot assume, as some do, that the subjugation of all Europe is beyond Hitler's reach. It is not. Should he triumph over Great Britain he will unquestionably be powerful enough to put down every flare-up of rebellion in any area under his control. Frenchmen and Belgians, Hollanders and Norwegians, Danes and Poles may never willingly do the bidding of their German taskmasters. They may have ruthlessly been forced to act with unmitigated brutality against those who cross their will. Bare hands and bitter hearts are no match against machine guns and tanks and dive bombers.

Patriotic Colors Voted for Spring

The girls will blossom forth this spring in red, white and blue, according to patriotic trends indicated at the annual Los Angeles spring fashion opening this week. The patriotic colors form the ruling color combination of the show.

Shapely Muriel Morris shows how effective the combination can be in bathing suits. It is of cable stitch with alternate stripes of red, white and blue.

Two Women Detectives Share in 'Pay Off'

By John Singerhoff
Post Staff Writer

With shiny tin badges and close to $10,000 in their pockets, 400 out-of-town policemen and two policewomen left Washington last night, well satisfied with their three-day "bus man's holiday."

They came to town Saturday for the Inauguration and worked as they would at home—as cops. Some of the visiting policemen never even saw the President.

The "payoff" came at 1 p. m. yesterday, in front of District Court, when 80 detectives of the detail, including the two women, lined up to receive the praise and thanks of Maj. Ernest W. Brown and Inspector Bernard W. Thompson—and $45 each. They were paid $15 for each of the three days.

They told the men that their work "prevented a single crime."

The two women—Mrs. Constance Geltman and Mrs. Barbara C. Popken, both New York City policewomen—with typical feminine enthusiasm, were "thrilled" by the Inaugural and thought the police "did a splendid job."

Both women were chosen for the detail from among 160 other policewomen in New York, in answer to Maj. Brown's request for "the best two women detectives." They are attached to Woman's Bureau and specialize in criminal work, they said.

Mrs. Popken is a veteran of 17 years' service and is old enough to have a married daughter. She wouldn't reveal her age, nor did her gray hair give her away. Her "partner," Mrs. Geltman, is a rookie with less than a year's experience. But Capt. Rhoda Millekin, commander of the local Women's Bureau, described her as "an excellent officer."

Both women "worked" the hotels during the three-day period, "protecting male visitors from designing females," as Capt. Millekin put it. They were teamed with two local policewomen, Detective Pearl Pythian and Private Mary Ward.

The 320 uniformed patrolmen from New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, who handled the crowds and traffic, also were excused. They too received the souvenir badges and $8 for each day, in addition to their traveling expenses.

Records show that not one visitor was flim-flammed or robbed during the Inaugural ceremony. One robbery occurred Monday night and one man reported his wallet "either lost or stolen."

Exercise Hips For Trim Lines, Expert Advises

Carol Bruce Retains Slim Loveliness Through Calisthenics

By Ida Jean Kain

THE SCREEN is such a meanie about exaggerating an extra fraction of an inch in measurement that when a stage star signs for the movies she can't rest until she sits down—whether she needs to or not.

Take Carol Bruce. She is so patently one of the main reasons why the public is thoroughly sold on the Broadway hit, "Louisiana Purchase," that it will probably be months before she starts her screen career. But she says she has to get busy. She thinks she has "hips."

She is 5 feet 5 without shoes, weighs only 120 pounds, and has these lovely measurements: Bust, 34 inches; waist, 24 inches; hips, 33 1/4 inches. Nevertheless, she is determined to improve on perfection, and it's a fact that she doesn't have much time, what with singing in the show, over the radio, and posing for pictures several times a week.

The program she considers most efficient for slimming the hips fits in beautifully with the plans of those who really need to lose some inches off this measurement, and it will happen to be in the heavyweight class, with from 50 to 100 pounds to lose, you couldn't find a better set of exercises. Start off with this one:

Half-Barrel Roll

Trims Hips

Sit on the floor with legs straight and together, but heels held slightly off the floor. Try to keep your balance as you lean back, arms held straight out at the sides, shoulder level. Ready? Go into a half-barrel roll, first away over on the right hip, then give yourself a push and roll back over to the left side. This roll should take in a rear projection as well as pads on the outer side of either hip. Keeping the feet off the floor helps to tone the lower abdominal wall.

For variety and increased efficiency in your exercises, do this one: Lie back on the floor with hands clasped back of head, legs straight down on floor, and raise alternate legs from the hips to form right angle with the trunk. Repeat 10 times, relax for a minute, then roll again.

A full-length roll takes in more territory—it will smooth the thighline, too—and is a valuable addition to hip subtraction. Lie on the floor, hands clasped above the head, arms framing the head, and legs held together and straight. Use the upper arms and shoulders as propellers and roll yourself from side to side. Finish by rolling over and over, then rest—you'll need it!

Almost Impossible for Parents to Exert Healthy Influence on Children's Lives, Without Standing Accused of Stifling Interference, Mother Reports

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My daughter, 19, has been continually "on the go," socially, this winter—keeping very late hours. This is understandable, when she is attending debutante dances, which begin and end late. But I am seriously concerned about the hours she keeps on "regular dates"—for the movies and such. On such occasions, she comes in as late as 3 a. m. or later. Or, if she gets home around midnight, the boy stays until 2 a. m. or later, until I am forced to ask him to go home. Then both of them feel, resentfully, that they are being "treated like children." I would not object to the boy's staying until 1 a. m., but I certainly think he should leave at that hour.

My daughter feels that she should be "allowed to lead her own life." She thinks I am "old fashioned." Her attitude toward me, and the standards I believe in, seems to be the typical "younger generation" attitude toward parents today. She is rebellious at any suggestion of discipline—and I often wonder how (or where) it is all going to end.

My father was a physician (a general practitioner), as is my brother—and as a result of my association with them, I have had occasion to know more than most women do, about the tragedies which overtake reckless, unchaperoned young girls. I know how often the family doctor hears the pitiful wail: "But doctor, I trusted my daughter absolutely!" Or, "Doctor, I trusted that boy as I would have trusted my own son!"

There is no satisfactory repairing of the damage, once it has been done. Those who seek to give aid and consolation in such circumstances firmly feel that the tragedy might have been avoided had the parent been actively on the job. How can a parent ever know when his child is strong enough to resist temptation? Every parent wants to trust his child; wants to believe the best of his son or daughter—and is slow to believe and quick to resent the outsider's distrust or criticism. But none of us parents dare close our eyes to the emotional dangers and moral temptations which surround our young people continually.

No please, Miss Haworth, let our young people hear from you just how wrong—how dangerous—are very late hours. Perhaps they will give more respect to your opinion than to those of us parents—because convinced of the detachment of your viewpoint. It is almost impossible for the average parent to exert a protective influence in his children's lives—an influence usefully intended to protect their best interests—without inviting the charge of "trying to lead their lives for them." I am awaiting your comment with much hope. Gratefully yours, HARASSED MOTHER.

Era of Youth-in-Saddle Is on the Way Out

DEAR H. M.: In the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post you will find a fascinating editorial article written by Will Durant, under the title, as I recall, of "Discipline or Slavery." Reviewing democracy's chances to survive dictator attack and disarrangement—and to emerge triumphant, strengthened and purified by the imposition of the framework of the world's future social order—Mr. Durant points the individual's inescapable responsibility for the success or failure of this most-nearly Christian way of life. And he mercilessly delineates, in passing, the spineless incompetence of the average American parent in dealing with his obstreperous offspring.

That parent who formerly or frantically laments his children's perilous waywardness is a parent who "himself" lacks those qualities of judgment, strength, obedience to reason, justice and a spiritually higher authority, which he looks for in vain in his children's characters. As has been said, you cannot give what you haven't got—and the reason so many parents fail to bring their children to disciplined young adulthood is because these parents themselves fought shy of the discipline of parenthood.

They neglected to address themselves to the manifold responsibilities of splendid child rearing with that faithful, intelligent exactness which is necessary to success in any vocational or avocational endeavor. At various stages along the way, they had taken holidays from their task—because they were "tired," or "too busy" with other things, or because somebody else seemed qualified to relieve them of the job; or because they believed the children would "turn out all right, without too much bother on their part." They have all the advantages, etc., etc.

The time has come—I agree with Mr. Durant—for parents to have done with this business of humoring and placating youth; of courting youth's good will with complete and meekly hopeful concession. The time has come for parents to do an about-face and once more become parents in the old-fashioned, vigorous spirit of the term. Let them tell their children what they can and cannot do, under their parents' roof and as their parents' dependents. And let them see that their rules and wishes are obeyed. Let the children adopt themselves to the stern necessity of earning their parents' good will, for a change. After all, their (the children's) success in the larger world of affairs—in the social arena, in the field of work, etc.—is and will always be largely dependent on their versatile ability to accumulate the deserved and discriminating approbation of their elders.

Conversing recently with an authority on "adolescent psychology," I was pleased and astonished to hear him say, in effect, that he was getting pretty fed up with the latter-day, widespread, nonsensical notion that to be a parent is, automatically, to be in the wrong and guilty on the defensive—in the matter of dealing with adolescent offspring. Talking, also, with a brilliant young "career man," who is the father of three small children, and whose ancestors for generations have been exclusively Protestant in their religious faith—I learned that he believes Catholic convent-school training for girls (with its emphasis upon duty, virtue, obedience, industry, piety, etc.) has no superior in the academic field of feminine character-building.

These views I construe as straw-in-the-wheel, indicating that the "hey-hey" era of the past two decades—which saw American youth in the saddle, scornfully riding apologetic, long-suffering parents to the limits of their muddled endurance—is rapidly drawing to a close. Now, we approach a New Order of things. The whole Occidental world is engaged in rediscovering eternal and changeless spiritual and social and personal values. The importance—the moral and social indispensability—of austerely self-disciplined individuals is again being stressed.

And the girl or boy of today, who entertains the faintest hope of discharging with honor the grave responsibilities which will be his (and hers) tomorrow, must begin now to walk, by deliberate choice, in the invigorating and spiritually muscle-toning paths of righteousness. Those who will not voluntarily fall in line must, for their own sakes, be cuffed into line. And those who defiantly persist in falling out of line must be regarded as flagrantly sleazy and irreclaimably worthless human material.

As for the dangers to youth inherent in late hours—the real danger lies not in the hours, but in the philosophy of behavior implicit in irresponsible, shortsighted night-prowling and post-midnight oil-burning. Those are the wastrels, not the workers, who proclaim the morose, hedonistic assumption that one's reason-for-being is just to have fun. And those who permit themselves to be allowed by guardians to proceed on that assumption, are due for a sad awakening and a dreadful hang-over, in the years ahead. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Two Trends in Spring Hats—the Sailor and the Visor

The sailor hat of the gay 90's is now back in the spring hat picture—in modified form. This Madagascara straw with orange raffia edging and hatpin looks like it might have topped the head of a Gibson Girl. It is worn jauntyly.

A visor hat is the thing this spring whether it's the influence of the Navy or a copy of your own little boy's cap. Movie Actress Ann Edmonds wears here a new version in mustard gold suede. The perky little bow is a new note of trimming.

New Patterns In Tablecloths

If you're getting tired of the classic chrysanthemum and rose patterns in your tablecloths, consider some of the more modern designs being produced by the Irish linen damask weavers. For instance, there's one design which features the famous Maine pine tree and weaves it into a cloth which would be perfect for the Christmas dinner table. Still another uses ferns, grasses and lily pads to make a pattern reminiscent of a woodland scene. And there are plenty more ideas, too, which will add a fresh touch to your festive board.

The Gentler Sex

Belshazzar's Feasters

"More work and less chicken à la king," is the slogan of a new patriotic movement being launched by Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey, noted crusader and president of the Do Something About It League.

"The women of the United States are literally eating themselves to death in the name of business, charity, club work and even sociability," declared Mrs. DeGoofey yesterday at her press conference.

"While Rome burns, they are stuffing themselves with chilled melon balls, lamb chops in panties, chicken in timbales, chicken in patties, chicken en casserole, Duchesse potatoes, Frenched string beans, rum ice cream, macaroons, cheese, popcorn, ribbon sandwiches, radish roses and pigs in blankets.

Too Much Stuffing And Confabbing

"While millions of people abroad go hungry, American women are ruining their figures and their digestions and wasting centuries of time confabbing at luncheons, dinners, teas and cocktails. It has apparently become impossible for a group of women—or even two—to get together to discuss or plan anything without it's being over a serving of capon and peas, a cup of tea and a chocolate cream puff or a Martini and stuffed artichoke."

"But, Mrs. DeGoofey," protested a director of public relations for a large paper lace doily company, "don't you think it really saves time for people to transact business at luncheon or cocktails?"

"I do not," was the reply. "I have never known of a so-called business get-together over food that did not take at least two hours and from which everyone did not leave stuffed, uncomfortable and completely fuzzy in the head concerning what had been talked about."

"But where would people do their work if not at luncheons and cocktails?" asked a contact woman for the Associated Nut Cup Corporation.

"At a desk, in an office, for one place," retorted Mrs. DeGoofey. "Where would they meet?" asked the editor of the Amalgamated Ladies' Quarterly.

Squab and Caviar For Humanitarians

"At their places of business, in their homes, or even in a hired hall, there is no reason on earth why women in business, or even in social life, must have something to chaw on the moment they get together. There is no reason why the members of a club committee have to have a cup of chocolate with whipped cream, or a highball with potato chips, every time they meet to plan how to raise money to have the piano tuned. There is certainly no reason why organizations trying to help the bombed and the starving of Europe or the needy of this country should have to go on interminably dis-

AN INVITATION to the platinum room—Tommy Jones' orchestra playing! What girl isn't aching for such a chance? But pretty dresses and a charming smile aren't enough to win an invitation like that; you have to be a really "A-1" dancer. Know the Conga and other smart steps.

That's why a clever girl will practice at home, learn steps perfectly with diagrams and directions. You won't catch such girls ruining their chances by sighing, "Oh! I can't dance that one!" You can easily master the basic Conga step we've shown. To get that "native" Cuban flavor you dance with feet flat on floor, knees relaxed and hips swaying smoothly. Each accented fourth beat you emphasize with a slight kick. Count 1—Step to side on left foot, hips sway left. 2—Cross right foot over left, hips sway right. 3—Step to side on left foot,

And how are you on those perennial favorites, the waltz and fox trot? Even more important to a girl's popularity is her ability to do the familiar steps really well, know the smart variations, too.

Make your dancing bring you more exciting dates! Our 40-page booklet, "Social Dancing Self-Taught," gives diagrams and directions for the waltz, fox trot, Westchester, shag, tango, rumba, Conga and Lindy hop. Has basic steps, variations; pointers on leading and following.

Mrs. Roosevelt Begins Another Bustling Week

Unfatigued After Round of Inaugural Activities, First Lady Starts New Calendar By Receiving State Governors Group Today

By Hope Ridings Miller

ALMOST ANY WOMAN except Mrs. Roosevelt would take a nice long rest—after the hectic round of appointments, parties and continual hand-shaking that she has negotiated the past few days. But there's no vacation in sight for the indefatigable First Lady, who outlined at her press conference yesterday a forthcoming calendar that will keep her going at usual high speed from now until her next press conference, Wednesday, January 23.

Hope Ridings Miller

Yesterday afternoon she attended the educational and recreational conference at the Hotel Washington, and then managed to get back to the White House by 3 o'clock to receive Mrs. B. J. Thill, who was named "typical consumer" by the National Retail Merchants' Association. An hour later, the First Lady attended the dedication of the new wing at Freedmen's Hospital. Accompanying her was Wayne Coy, assistant Federal security administrator.

Mrs. Roosevelt will receive a group from the Council of State Governors at the White House at 4 o'clock this afternoon. She will be guest of honor at a luncheon given by Wickard will be the two Cabinet hostesses who will be "at home" this afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock. The former will receive at Headquarters Farm, while Mrs. Wickard will entertain in her apartment at the Westchester.

To Fete Actors

Sunday Night

Following the performance of "Old Acquaintance" at the National Theater Sunday night in connection with the President's Birthday celebrations, Mrs. Roosevelt will entertain members of the east at the White House. On Monday, she will be off to New Haven, Conn., to speak to an undergraduate group at Yale University, and she will return by plane the following day in time to be fete at a luncheon given by Mrs. Henry A. Wallace. At 3:30 Tuesday afternoon, the First Lady will gather in a group to hear Jerome Davis describe the work he did in the last year, and a similar program he is carrying on now in connection with prisoners in Canada.

On Tuesday evening, Mrs. Roosevelt will attend a dinner here for the Open Road group—an organization interested in arranging study trips through the United States and South America. Mrs. John Boettiger, daughter of President and Mrs. Roosevelt, will be among the guests at Mrs. Ickes' luncheon tomorrow. The party will take place at Headquarters Farm, the Ickes home near Olney, Md., and others in the company will include Mrs. Felix Frankfurter, Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Mrs. Frank Knox, Mrs. Lyndon Johnson, Mrs. Archibald MacLeish, Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, Miss Helen Gahagan, who, with her actor husband, Melvyn Douglas, is visiting Secretary and Mrs. Ickes; Mrs. Benjamin Thomas; Mrs. Dean Acheson; Mrs. Michael Straus and Miss Ruth Finney; Mrs. Ickes and Mrs. Claude R.

Engagement Announced

MISS KITTY WHITEHEAD MOSS,

whose engagement to George Robbins Brown is made known by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kimbrough Moss. The bride-elect attended George Washington University. Mr. Brown, the son of Andrew H. Brown, of Cleveland, is the grandson of Mrs. George N. Brown, of Washington. He received his B. A. and LL. B. degrees from George Washington University, where he was a member of Theta Delta Chi. He is also a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Order of the Coif. The wedding will take place in the spring.

Capital Whirl

By Sally Swift

REPRESENTATIVE and Mrs. Richard Wigglesworth have arrived in Washington with their small daughters and have taken up residence in the house in Georgetown just vacated by Mr. and Mrs. Armistead Peter 3d. The Wigglesworths are one of Washington's most popular Congressional couples and their parties are always full of interesting people. Their hospitality combines the best traditions of the North and the South. Representative Wigglesworth being, of course, from Massachusetts, and his charming wife from Kentucky.

THE PETERS, to the regret of their hordes of friends in the Capital, are returning to their farm in New York State near Albany but have practically promised to come back in the spring to give their attractive debutante daughter, Anne, another taste of Washington gaiety. Before leaving Georgetown the Peters gave an informal dinner-party. The hostess was charming in a black velvet dinner-gown with a panel of jade-green in the skirt. Mrs. Higginson Rogers wore becoming pale beige and had her hair piled high on her head in a new coiffure that brought forth approving comment. Among the others present were Mrs. Melvin Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Creighton Peet, and Pendleton Turner.

DROPPING IN at Mrs. Foulke Dewey's house on Massachusetts Avenue the other afternoon for a cocktail I found Mrs. Sturgis Finan down from New York and looking lovely in gray from top to toe. She was positively shyness with enthusiasm over the ball for Scottish relief which she is organizing and which will take place at the Waldorf on January 31. The decorations and costumes will emphasize Scotland and the Rockettes will appear in kilts. The McNeil of Barra is chairman of the committee and will certainly wear his kilt to the party and Betty Finan is hoping that Angus Malcolm, of the British Embassy will be able to leave his work long enough to lead a reel. Angus' brother, Victor Malcolm, is in New York purchasing war supplies for the British Government and the two of them in their kilts will be a fine sight.

Mrs. Finan, who was wearing one of the stunning Scotch thistle pins which will be sold at the ball, said that all of the money taken in will go to buy a flying hospital for Scotland, and that not one cent will go to expenses. The purveyors of that popular liquid called "Scotch" have underwritten all of the expenses of the fete.

SIR GERALD CAIPBELL, newly-appointed British Minister to Washington and, with Neville Butler, aide to Lord Halifax, is planning to attend the ball, as is John Foster and a number of others from the Capital. Mrs. Finan was accompanied to Mrs. Dewey's the other day by Mr. and Mrs. James Mabon, of New York. All of them have been house guests of John Foster for a few days. Also present were Prince and Princess Aleksander Hohenlohe. The latter was in black with a fascinating black turban surmounted by a huge white flower. Others there were Mrs. Drew Pearson, Buzzy Hewes, Ricardo Siro of the Argentine Embassy, James M. Beck, Lieut. Col. William Shipp and several others.

One of the American gentlemen present, upon hearing the plans for the Scottish relief ball discussed, remarked that Scotch was his only foreign affiliation and that he thought he'd go to New York for the party.

Farewell Party Given by Wyatts For the Gradys

Former Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Henry F. Grady, who will leave Washington early next month to make their home in San Francisco, were guests of honor at a dinner given last evening by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wyatt in their home on Kalma Road. Others in the company were Justice and Mrs. Justin Miller, Dr. and Mrs. Stanley E. Hornbeck, Mr. and Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo, Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Leonard, Dr. and Mrs. Tomas Cajigas and Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Donald Smith. Mrs. Grady was fete at a luncheon yesterday given by Mrs. Felix Gyagay at the latter's home in Morrison Street. The party was one of a large number of farewell parties planned for Mrs. Grady. Justice and Mrs. Justin Miller have cards out for a tea on Tuesday, January 23, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Grady.

Martins Give Their First Big Party of Season

Envoy Just Returned From Brazil; Wife Recovered From Flu

Trips and flu have kept the Brazilian Ambassador and Senhora de Martins out of the Washington picture for several months. Among the most hospitable of the diplomatic corps, they entertained at their first large party of the season yesterday afternoon. Senor and Senhora de Martins returned recently after several weeks in Brazil. Shortly after their arrival the latter caught gripe, and is just now up and about.

The party was in honor of pretty Miss Peggy Lansdowne, attractive debutante daughter of Mrs. John Caswell. Later in the evening Mrs. Caswell gave a dinner for the Ambassador and Senhora de Martins.

In true South American style, yesterday's party ran later than do most such affairs in Washington—the invitations read "until 7:30." The hostess, wearing a dress of pale blue, floor length, received the enormous drawing room of the embassy. Miss Lansdowne had chosen a floor-length dress in a blue-green shade, with gold embroidery edging the square neckline. A purple-tipped orchid completed her costume. Mrs. Caswell was in blue crepe, street length, with a silver fox scarf.

The Hal Wallises With Mrs. Pepper

Mrs. Claude Pepper's house guests, Mr. and Mrs. Hal Wallis (she is Louise Fazenda) were a center of attraction during the party. Mrs. Wallis wore black, with a wide white collar, and a big hat.

There were numerous visiting Latin Americans and representatives of the Diplomatic Corps. The Counselor of Brazilian Embassy and Senora de Konder were present, as were the Second Secretary and Mme. Gouthier, and the Commercial Counselor, Paulo Hasselocher.

The Ambassador spent most of his time in the dining room, seeing that everybody had a good time.

From the Argentine Embassy came Senor and Senora de Pardo and Senora de Scilingo, but the latter's husband was kept late at the chancery. Others present from the Diplomatic Corps included Baron James Baeyens and M. and Mme. Charles Lucet, of the French Embassy, and Mme. Fotitch, wife of the Yugoslav Minister. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert stopped by on their way to a dinner at the Drew Pearsons. Mrs. Robert arrived in a coat with a huge lynx collar. She had just stepped off the train from New Jersey, where she attended the inauguration of Gov. Charles Edison, former Secretary of the Navy. Owing to the illness of Mrs. Edison, Mrs. Robert acted as hostess at the festivities.

Zeva Fish Wears Scarlet Jacket

Both young people and their elders mingled at the party. Mrs. Hiram Bingham was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Kitty Hill, who wore gray crepe and a small black hat. Mrs. Denarest Lloyd chatted with Mrs. Millard Tydings, who was accompanied by the Senator. Mrs. Tydings wore a white fur jacket and a white hat with her outfit. Miss Zeva Fish, a debutante, was present, wearing a scarlet jacket, embroidered in gold, over her dress. Other guests included Clem Conger, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dewey, Robert Parsons, Prince and Princess Aleksander Hohenlohe, she wearing a full-length coat of silver fox; Admiral and Mrs. George T. Pettengill, and dozens of others.

At Mrs. Caswell's dinner, Lieut. Charles Post acted as host in the absence of Mr. Caswell, who is ill with flu. Others present were Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. John Mitchell, who recently came here and are living at the Wardman Park; Maj. Arthur Richmond, Mrs. Lionel Atwill and Maj. and Mrs. Richard Porter Davidson.

Junior Leaguers Hold Luncheon At Clubhouse

Washington Junior Leaguers, headed by their president, Mrs. Montgomery Blair, Jr., gathered at the clubhouse on Massachusetts Avenue yesterday for the second of their monthly luncheons. Several recent league transfers from other cities were among the special guests of the group. They included Miss Nan Ferguson, of New York, and Mrs. Richard Underwood, of Detroit. Those in charge of arrangements for the luncheon were Mrs. Robert F. Wilson and Mrs. Bowman MacArthur. The guests numbered about 25.

The Frank Bunkers Hosts at Dinner

Mrs. Nelson Johnson, wife of the United States Envoy to China, shared honors with the Counselor of our Embassy at Chungking, Willis R. Peck, and Mrs. Peck, at a dinner held last night at the Washington Club. Hosts were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Forrest Bunker. Mrs. Johnson recently returned to Washington. The Pecks are here for a month while Mr. Peck does temporary duty at the State Department. The Charge d'Affaires of Great Britain and Mrs. Neville Butler were in the party. About the Town with Dudley Harmon

THE LAST of the crumpled periscopes and torn newspapers have by this time been swept from the pavements, and the only souvenirs now are a chain of feet. However, some visitors who came here for the great event, lingered on after it was over to see the sights and friends.

Among the out of towners here were Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Cartier of New York. They spent yesterday down at the Senate, where they were shown around by Nathan Bartlett. Others lunching at the Senate restaurant were Edward G. Robinson, the actor, and Mrs. Claude Pepper.

The Cartiers' only daughter is married to Pierre Claudel, whose father, Paul Claudel, well known poet and diplomat, was one of the most popular Ambassadors France ever sent here. Mme. Pierre Claudel is now in occupied France, and her parents hear nothing from her. She returned there because her husband is a prisoner in a German camp and she is doing her utmost to obtain his release.

The former Ambassador, now 73 years old, is living in his chateau near Lyons. Another of his sons, Henri Claudel, arrived in New York several months ago, a refugee, with his wife and two children. His sister-in-law, Mme. Paul Weiller, also a refugee here, is the wife of a French aircraft engine manufacturer. He was taken prisoner by the Nazis—probably because he blew up his plants in France two hours before the advancing army arrived to seize them.

Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw, who is the house guest of Mrs. Frederick Mitchell Gould, is an interesting person. Her particular hobby is international affairs. She served as chairman for the exhibit which the League of Nations arranged at the New York World's Fair.

One of the most thrilled visitors for inauguration was little Ira Nelson Morris, 24. He came here with his grandmother, Mrs. Ira Nelson Morris, whose husband was for many years our envoy to Switzerland. They went to the White House luncheon and had excellent seats for the parade.

CARLOS BRINS, the newly arrived Ambassador to Panama, is losing no time revisiting old haunts. A former student in Washington, he went to call on the Superintendent of Central High School and to have a look at his old schoolroom there.

Jean Ehrman, Counselor of the Embassy, has three charming sisters, all of whom have been sick at the same time in a Baltimore hospital. However, one recovered in time to come here for inauguration. She is Senora Maria de Y Caza and is staying at the embassy with Senora de Brins.

ALSO IN Washington is Miss Ella O'Day, daughter of Representative Caroline O'Day. She is stopping at the Sulgrave Club, where she had a few old friends in for lunch yesterday. Miss O'Day reports that her mother is continuing to convalesce from her illness and that they hope to be back soon.

INAUGURATION incidents: In the past the visiting Governors have always had to go without lunch, or else swallow a hamburger hastily, in order to be in time to take their places at the head of the parade. This year the inaugural committee saw to it that sandwiches and hot coffee were placed in the Governors' cars. Mrs. Robert Rich, wife of the Representative from Pennsylvania, is an enthusiastic cook. For the tea Representative Margaret Smith gave on Sunday she baked over 200 little cakes. And that's a day's work on anybody's calendar.

Ropers Give Tea in Honor of Gov. Maybank

Empress Carlotta Necklace of Hostess Stirs Admiration

It was a beautiful party any way you looked at it, but it was Empress Carlotta's necklace that caused the "Oh's" and "Ah's" among the guests. The event was an afternoon tea given by former Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper at their Woodland Drive home, in honor of the Governor of South Carolina and Mrs. Burnet R. Maybank.

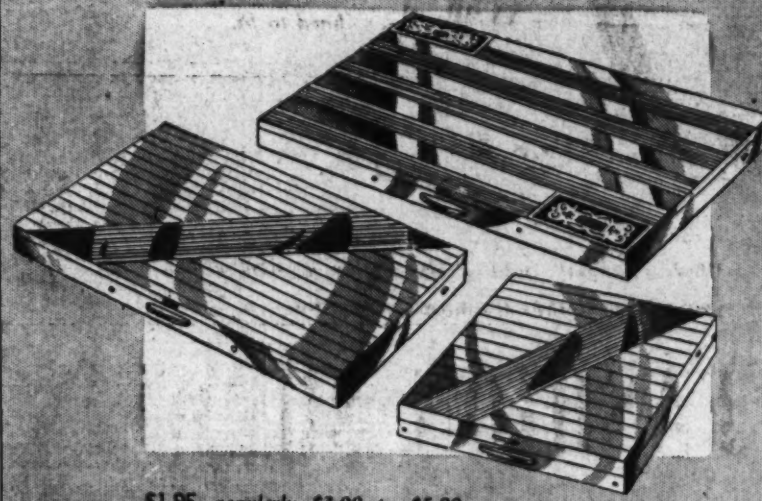

The necklace in question, worn by the hostess, was one of exquisite hand-wrought gold, which had belonged to the Empress Carlotta, consort of Emperor Maximilian of Mexico. It had been sent to Mrs. Roper as a golden wedding present. Yesterday Mrs. Roper also wore her golden wedding gown of gold lame. Mrs. Maybank was chic in black, with a small blue flowered toque. Both hostess and guest of honor wore corsages of deep pink carnations, which had been brought from South Carolina by the Ropers' daughter, Mrs. David R. Coker.

Generally assisting during the afternoon was another daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roper, Mrs. Frank Bohn. She was gowned in black velvet, with small cap sleeves of white ermine. Assisting at the tea table were Mrs. James F. Byrnes, Mrs. Monroe Johnson, Mrs. Austin Latimer, Mrs. Charles E. Galloway, Mrs. Charles E. Jackson and Mrs. Lucille Foster McMillin. Noted among the guest during the afternoon were the retiring Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Henry F. Grady, Joseph E. Davies, the Minister of South Africa and Mrs. Ralph William Close, the Bulgarian Minister and Mme. Naumoff, former Gov. of South Carolina and Mrs. O. Max Gardner, Justice and Mrs. Justin Miller, Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, Dr. and Mrs. Matthew White Perry, Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, Mrs. George D. Dorn, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris, Baroness von Below and hundreds more.

Press Club Has Governors as Guests at Luncheon

Mrs. Joseph Davies (left), wife of the chairman of the Inaugural Committee, photographed yesterday at the luncheon of the Women's National Press Club at the Willard Hotel, with Gov. Sam Jones of Louisiana, and former Gov. Nellie Tayloe Ross of Wyoming, now Director of the Mint. Mrs. J. Fred Essary, president of the club (in the second picture), with Gov. Murray D. Meeting Typifies Nation's Spirit Of Unity in Crisis

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Staff Editor.

The united spirit of the United States of America was exemplified yesterday in the expressions of Governors of nine States and an island possession at the luncheon of the Women's National Press Club at which they were guests of honor.

Gov. Harold Stassen of Minnesota, sounding the keynote of the luncheon as he did at the Republican National Convention, declared that "Not only yesterday (at the inauguration) but tomorrow and all of the tomorrow, so far as the crisis of this country is concerned, the Governors of the States will give united support to the established foreign policy of the Federal Government."

There cannot be two foreign policies, he pointed out, and the Governors of the States will stand with the President as Chief Executive of the Federal Government, "backed by the solid depth of determination of free men and free women of America."

"As we endeavor to work out our cooperative place with the Federal Government in this crisis, we can also see how our cooperation in the two levels of government might prove an inspiration for a democratic union of the countries of the world with peace and law and justice substituted for force and ultimatums and war," he declared.

All of the Governors stressed the determination of the Nation to put the welfare of the country before partisanship. Gov. Herbert O'Connor of Maryland declared that "in September and October we were members of the Republican or Democratic Parties. Today we are working together as brothers and compatriots for the future of the greatest country in the world, America."

Gov. Murray D. Van Wagoner of Michigan, brother of Esther Van Wagoner Tufts, a prominent member of the club, urged that the people of the whole country be made to realize the seriousness of the situation "so as to keep the wheels of defense moving. We have no time for delay and labor disputes," he asserted.

Gov. Sam Jones of Louisiana, who was accompanied by Mrs. Jones, "my right arm in the work we have accomplished for Louisiana," said the overthrow of the Huey Long dictatorship in his State had put Louisiana in training for the task of combating world forces bent on destruction of democracy.

Mrs. Jones, a petite brunette, wore a brown felt hat and a tweed suit in tones of brown and beige. Among other Governors who spoke was Gov. William W. Willis of Vermont, who emphasized the importance of individual responsibility "if America is to be saved." Mrs. Willis also was there, wearing a black suit and hat.

Others were Gov. James H. Price of Virginia, Gov. S. M. Jones of Massachusetts, accompanied by Mrs. S. M. Jones, Gov. Matthew Neely of West Virginia, Gov. Charles Harwood of the Virgin Islands, whose appointment was confirmed yesterday, accompanied by Mrs. Harwood, former Gov. O. Max Gardner of North Carolina and former Gov. Nellie Tayloe Ross of Wyoming, now Director of the Mint.

Joseph Davies, chairman of the Inauguration Committee, who, with Mrs. Davies, was also a guest of honor, spoke of the evidence of unity and strength given on Inauguration Day by the whole Nation. Mrs. Davies also was present, wearing a costume of gray, with a wide-brimmed feather turban matching her dress.

Mrs. J. Fred Essary, the club president, who presided, wore a blue frock and black hat. Red ties, with variation in design, appeared to be the vogue in gubernatorial attire. Govs. Price, Van Wagoner, O'Connor, Willis, Stassen and former Gov. Gardner were wearing them.

Among guests of club members were Mrs. Ralph O. Brewster, wife of Senator Brewster, former Governor of Maine; Mrs. Charles Whitman, wife of the former Governor of New York; Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister, Miss Marion Martin, Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, of the Social Security Board, and Miss Minerva Bernardino, vice chairman of the Inter-American Commission of Women.

G.O.P. Women Elect Mrs. Reutemann

The Federation of Republican Women of Montgomery County yesterday elected Mrs. W. A. Reutemann, of Chevy Chase, as president to succeed Mrs. B. Shanks Chaney, of Takoma Park, who has served for the last two years. The biennial meeting at which Mrs. Harry I. Houston, chairman of the nominating committee, presented the slate of officers, was held at Mrs. Chaney's home.

Others elected were Mrs. Frank Rusk, Mrs. John C. Keale, Mrs. Galen Tait, Mrs. J. C. Allard, vice presidents; Mrs. Jacob H. Taylor, recording secretary; Mrs. Minnie Blodgett, corresponding secretary; Mrs. David W. Snyder, treasurer; and Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, Mrs. Chaney and Miss Olive D. Kinsman, directors.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

Bexar County, Tex., which boasts the only woman ranger, has another interesting Democratic leader among its prominent women—Mrs. W. B. Heaslet, who has been here for the inauguration and the conference of the Women's National Democratic Club.

Just 13 years ago, Mrs. Heaslet entered San Antonio Junior College, registering as a freshman with her son, Howard. She attended three times a week for two years, studying sociology and political science. At the same time, she did her own housework and looked after her small daughter, who was in the first grade. She also had an older son in college at that time.

Mrs. Heaslet became interested in politics in 1919 when she paid her first poll tax. Then she joined the Alamo City Woman's Democratic Club, of which she is now president and which is affiliated with the Women's National Democratic Club with headquarters here. She has taught political science in the club as well as doing other club work.

Hadassah Hears Mrs. Epstein

The medical work of Hadassah, in Palestine, has brought the health standards from those of the thirteenth century to the twentieth in the space of a score of years. Mrs. Moses P. Epstein, past president of the national organization, told members of the Washington Chapter yesterday. Mrs. Epstein, who is now coordinator of Hadassah projects both in Palestine and America, addressed the January meeting of the chapter at the Jewish Community Center. Mrs. Moe Offenberger, the president, presided, and Mrs. Henry Segal introduced the speaker.

The care of the European refugee population is not regarded as relief by Hadassah, Mrs. Epstein pointed out, but as a project of establishing them in new homes with a chance for normal life as a normal people. The Zionists do not look upon Palestine as a land of succor for a needy people or as a picturesque land of past, she said, but as a country awakening from generations of medievalism to which is being brought the best of the West.

The hospital on Mount Scopus is regarded not merely as a plan to help individual patients, but as a distinct contribution to the scientific life of the Near East, she said. It has an extraordinary staff because of the Jewish doctors and scientists who lost their positions in Central Europe, she pointed out.

The parchment sheets of the "birthday book" for Henrietta Gold, founder of the Hadassah, were signed by all of the paid-up members.

Alpha Chi Omega Alumnae Hear Chinese Student

Mme. Ts Chung Liu, who is studying at Cornell with her husband, talked on "China Today" at a luncheon meeting of Alpha Chi Omega alumnae yesterday at the home of Mrs. Owen L. Scott, 2001 Plymouth Street.

Wearing a blue and black robe—quilted at the bottom and embroidered in blue at the top, she told the members she had brought embroidered robes with her to America because she had heard Americans would expect her to have that kind. But on her return to the interior of China when she and her husband complete their courses, she expects to wear the plainest cloth and lead the simple life to which all Chinese have adapted themselves in order to help their country, she said.

She spoke good English, having studied it six years before coming to this country 18 months ago. It is now compulsory in the high schools, she told the sorority members.

Need in District for Division Of Mental Hygiene Held Urgent

Public school children alone could keep a mental hygiene division in the Health Department busy, a group of civic workers was told yesterday by Miss Jessie LaSalle, assistant superintendent in charge of research.

Joining several other speakers in urging establishment of such a unit, Miss LaSalle described the need as an urgent one in her talk before the Council of Social Agencies health division at the Y. W. C. A.

Broken homes, frequent changes of address, the speedier tempo of life today, poverty—these are among the leading factors responsible for behavior problems of children, the school official declared.

In the first three months of the current term, 7,400 of the 29,000 boys and girls enrolled in elementary schools changed addresses at least once, entailing shifts to other schools. Leaving old teachers and friends and having to make new ones is not easy for some youngsters, sometimes producing maladjustment, Miss LaSalle said.

She also cited a school, 75 per cent of whose pupils come from homes where the income is $60 a month or less, half of the families being on relief. This, too, is a condition reflected by behavior problems, she declared.

Dr. Victor H. Vogel, of the Public Health Service, expressed the hope the District will soon fall in line with those States which are setting up mental health bureaus.

Dr. George C. Ruhland, health officer, has long tried to obtain a small appropriation for the project but in vain, Dr. Vogel pointed out.

Dr. Winifred Overholser, superintendent of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, said public mental hygiene clinics would help clear away misconceptions of problems connected with treatment.

George Harrison Hyatt, 52, brother of Mrs. Judson Sinclair Wardrop, of 951 Bonifant Street, Silver Spring, Md., and of the late Mrs. Judson Boles, of Arlington, Va., died yesterday at his home in West Columbia, S. C.

Mrs. Hyatt had been in Washington last month to attend Mrs. Boles' funeral. Long a resident of the District and a graduate of Washington schools, he went to South Carolina, where he became president of the South Carolina and Virginia Termite Co. He was also treasurer of the South Carolina Boy Scout organization.

Funeral arrangements had not been completed last night.

Dr. von Strensch, the Count de Blackmere, Dies on D.C. Visit

Friedrich Auguste Richard von Strensch, the Count de Blackmere, a New York neurologist who once was a colonel in the army of Emperor Wilhelm I of Germany died yesterday at the home of Washington friends. He was 81.

Known in professional life as Dr. von Strensch, the count was visiting Mrs. Robert E. Lee 3d, of 2140 Wyoming Avenue Northwest, when he contracted pneumonia several days ago.

Mrs. Lee said yesterday that Count de Blackmere came to this country at the turn of the century and was called to the White House frequently to treat the wife of President McKinley.

As a young lieutenant he was sent to Africa by Kaiser Wilhelm to explore and take possession of unmapped colonial lands.

Here he learned the value of medical knowledge and upon his return to Germany received permission to study medicine. He also received the thanks of a grateful emperor who granted him a vast parcel of land in Africa, reputed to be worth millions.

Wealthy at the time, he made no attempt to develop the tract. But later, after his arrival in the United States, a change in fortunes stimulated his interest in the African land. Before he could do much about it, however, the property was taken over by France under the Versailles Treaty.

He made seven ocean crossings in an effort to get the land back, but the negotiations failed.

Count de Blackmere served as military attaché at the court of Prince Albert of Saxony and was decorated by the ruler of Holland.

Federal Diary

By Jerry Klutz

The inside reason why the Reed Committee on Civil Service Reform met yesterday on short notice is the fact that a showdown was forced by Dr. Leonard White, former Republican member of the Civil Service Commission. Apparently peeved by the long delays between meetings and the inability of the committee to agree on a report, Dr. White is reliably reported to have offered his resignation to Supreme Court Justice Stanley Reed. White, of course, would have taken his case direct to the White House as he was appointed by the President. He is understood to have withdrawn his resignation when Justice Reed hurriedly called a meeting.

"Progress" was reported after the meeting yesterday which may prove to be the committee's final session. Several sections of the report were ordered rewritten along the set of principles agreed on. The plan is to send the report to each committee member in the hopes that he will sign it. Attorney General Robert Jackson and Gen. Robert Wood called to attend the meeting.

William H. McReynolds, the President's Administrative assistant in charge of personnel, is trying to prod department heads into action on the Ranspach bill. Six weeks ago the Civil Service Commission asked departments to recommend employees that should be brought under Civil Service through the Ranspach bill. To date very few have responded and McReynolds has followed up the request with a demand for action.

The commission apparently would like to have all employees brought under merit by a single order. And this plan would be followed if the commission should get all the needed information within the next few weeks. If delays continue it is probable that the President will be asked to issue an order that would bring the jobs of HOLC and PWA employees under immediately. Both HOLC and PWA are liquidating and officials are anxious that the jobs be covered under before additional employees are laid off. Internal Revenue Bureau has asked for a delay until its several hundred new employees have served the necessary six months to make them eligible for merit.

NLRB today will fill two important jobs. Mortimer Kollender is being made assistant general counsel to replace Tom Emerson who resigned along with two others when J. Warren Madden wasn't reappointed to the board. He has been with the board since 1935 and is now a supervisor in the review division. Kollender is a New Yorker and a graduate of New York University. Gerhard P. Van Arkel will be appointed chief of the compliance unit. He has been with the board since 1935.

Nathan Witt, former NLRB secretary who quit along with Emerson, has joined the New York law firm which was formerly headed by Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel. . . . Alexander B. Hawes, the third official to resign, is working at National Defense Commission. . . . Garrett L. Patterson, former Chicago regional director, yesterday took a new job here as liaison officer. He will also handle complaints. Both of these functions formerly were handled in the secretary's office.

Conversations are being quietly held between officials of GAO, Federal Works, and the Welfare and Recreational Association that operates Government cafeterias. Last year GAO denounced the association as "illegal." Purpose of the conferences is to get together on a plan that all agencies can approve. Best guess is that it will take the form of a bill which Congress will be asked to approve.

Inauguration brought thousands here to see the show and hundreds to look for jobs. One of the busiest weeks in history was experienced last week by the Civil Service Commission information desk. More than 50,000 requests for information about jobs were received. Civil Service has plenty of jobs open. Here are just a few where there's a real shortage: Instrument maker, machinist, diesel engine designer, radio monitoring operator, airport construction and design civil engineers, loftman shipbuilder, lense grinder, toolmaker, airway traffic controller, inspector of hats, clothing, and textiles, inspector of air corps technical schools, inspector of ordnance materials, inspector of ship construction, inspector of signal corps equipment, inspector of engineering materials, aircraft inspector, aeronautical inspector, naval architect, aeronautical, marine and naval junior engineer, aeronautical engineer, and aeronautical draftsman.

An Army With Teeth

John Shea, 23, of New York, was anxious to join the Army but was rejected for defective teeth. He went to a dentist and in 10½ hours had 3 teeth pulled, 4 filled, 5 crowns repaired and 2 bridges inserted. He got in. Private Norman Smart, of Camp Shelby, Miss., was anxious to become a bugler. He took a test, blew so hard he loosened two teeth. He did not get the job.

Variety Club Dedicates New Dental Clinic

A dental clinic for Children's Hospital was dedicated by the Variety Club of Washington yesterday with more than 50 civic and District officials guests participating.

Second of its kind to be donated by the Variety Club, the new clinic will be operated for the benefit of the indigent. A similar clinic was presented last Wednesday by the club to the United States Children's Hospital.

The unit was accepted by Miss Mattie M. Gibson, superintendent of Children's, and presented in behalf of the club by Chief Barker Hardie Meakin and Rudolph Berger, chairman of the welfare committee. Ernest Milburn Colvin, 24-year-old son of Dr. and Mrs. E. M. Colvin and grandnephew of Commissioner Hazen, unveiled the new equipment.

Berger briefly outlined the founding of the Variety Club by a group of Pittsburgh showmen and told the group one of the chief aims of the club was promoting worthwhile charities.

The new equipment, which cost $3,000, includes two dental chairs, anesthetic apparatus, X-ray machine and dental instruments.

Among those present were Dr. Harry Ostrow, director of dental service for the District Health Department; Dr. Joseph Wall, chief of the medical staff of Children's; Mrs. William Sweet, president of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Washington Dental Society; Dr. Daniel F. Lynch, president of the Dental Society; Mrs. R. M. Kauffman, president of the board of lady visitors of Children's Hospital; Dr. Walter A. Rath, chief of the dental staff; Sidney Lust, former chief barker of Variety, and Dr. D. J. Palkin, who supervised purchase of equipment for the Variety Club.

Greeks Need Medicines Badly, Volunteers Told

Spyros P. Skouras, of New York, national president of the Greek War Relief Association, told District volunteer workers for the organization last night that conditions in Greece were more serious than reported.

He addressed nearly 100 volunteers at St. Sophia's Church, Eleghue Street, Northwest. Medical supplies particularly are needed, Skouras said.

"A dollar contributed now means everything," he declared, "while $10,000 given six months from now may mean nothing at all." The goal of the drive is $100,000.

Achilles Catonis, president of the District chapter of the association, presided at the meeting. Van Nomikos, of Chicago, supreme president of the Order of Ahepa, expressed the support of his organization.

Justice David A. Pine held that counsel for Mrs. Elizabeth J. Kenney, the Representative's widow, had failed to show that Mr. Kenney's fall was caused by any negligence of Washington Properties Inc., operators of the Carlton Hotel.

Attorneys Walter M. Shea and Lyle F. O'Rourke filed suit for Mrs. Kenney December 3, 1938. The case came to trial last week, after being delayed by the congested docket. Shea and O'Rourke said they would ask the United States Court of Appeals for a review.

Suit in Death Of Representative Thrown Out

A $10,000 damage suit for the death of Representative Edward A. Kenney, of New Jersey, who plunged from a sixth-floor window here on January 27, 1938, was thrown out of the District Court yesterday.

Justice David A. Pine held that counsel for Mrs. Elizabeth J. Kenney, the Representative's widow, had failed to show that Mr. Kenney's fall was caused by any negligence of Washington Properties Inc., operators of the Carlton Hotel.

Attorneys Walter M. Shea and Lyle F. O'Rourke filed suit for Mrs. Kenney December 3, 1938. The case came to trial last week, after being delayed by the congested docket. Shea and O'Rourke said they would ask the United States Court of Appeals for a review.

Foreman Injured In Fall From Bridge

Robert Fox, 23, foreman of laborers at the new Massachusetts Avenue Bridge, was in Garfield Hospital last night with two broken wrists suffered in a 25-foot fall. Police said Fox, who lives at 1322 Staples Street Northwest, was working near the center of the bridge when he lost his balance.

Allied Societies Send Felicitations; Dr. Clark Presides

Half a century of patriotic service was commemorated last night at the golden anniversary banquet of the District Society of Sons of the American Revolution, in honor of the wives of members, at the Mayflower.

Greetings from Daughters of the American Revolution were brought by Mrs. Geoffrey Cretzke, State vice president, after the Mayflower Hotel dinner. Robert M. Tracy, vice president general of the S. A. R., and Mrs. John M. Kerr, national president of the Children of the American Revolution, commended the local organization on its achievements during 50 years of life.

Dr. Earley Vernon Wilcox, president of the Shakespearean Society of the District, presided at the dinner. He told the more than 250 members and wives that "patriotism is one of the fundamental reasons for immortality in literature" and is one of the reasons for Shakespeare's predominance.

Presiding at the banquet and dinner was Dr. Clifton P. Clark, head of the local society. One of the honored member guests was Joseph I. Keefer, a collateral descendant of Mary Ball, George Washington's mother.

The benediction was said by Chaplain Samuel M. Croft.

Health Officials Not Alarmed By Flu Figures

Influenza remains a comparatively tame problem in the District, while still on the rise in the East, figures revealed yesterday.

The Health Department reported 38 new cases yesterday, bringing the weekly total to 99 and for the year to 396. This is far ahead of last January, but nothing to cause alarm, officials said.

However, reports received yesterday from 25 States indicated that the influenza epidemic has not yet reached its peak. The 35 reported 54,314 cases last week, compared with 52,057 the previous week.

Greatest jump was that made by West Virginia, where 430 new cases of flu were reported for the week ended January 11, and 8,867 for last week. Texas, which has been particularly hard hit, showed a drop from 33,283 to 30,713.

Church Trustees Burn Mortgage Symbolically

Four trustees of the Westminster Memorial Church, 474 Seventh Street Southwest, last night symbolically burned a 15-year-old mortgage and more than 100 parishioners watched a 90-minute ceremony.

The four men who circled the iron cauldron to ignite the photostatic copy of the note were the only trustees now living out of the nine who affixed their signatures to the mortgage in 1923. They are B. F. Anderson, J. W. McKelcher, J. W. Blake, and E. L. Kahler.

Among the speakers who praised the congregation of the small church for contributing to the debt's settlement were Anderson, the Rev. Freely Rohrer, D. D., and Dr. Alfred E. Barrows.

Michigan Society Hears Governor On Defense

The defense program will receive full cooperation from Michigan, the Nation's "production center," Murray D. Van Wagoner, the State's new Governor, declared here last night.

Speaking before the Michigan State Society dinner at 2400 Sixteenth Street Northwest, Van Wagoner said Michigan's public officials had one big job to do: "Keep the wheels of production turning, and turning faster with each new day."

Labor, he said, will support this effort. "I am confident that Michigan will have no serious labor difficulties under the defense program. Our organized labor leaders in Michigan today have a more responsible and politically conscious attitude than you might think. They are not going off the deep end."

Citizens Ask Midnight Dry Curfew

Interfederation Conference Also Calls for Renewal Of Dies Committee

A midnight curfew for the sale of liquor and beer on or off premises within the District and in nearby Maryland and Virginia counties was urged last night at a meeting of the Interfederation Conference.

Delegates representing 65 citizens associations in Washington and others in nearby counties appealed for uniform liquor laws in the metropolitan District area, discontinuance of the present 2 a. m. week-night bar-closing regulation in favor of a midnight limit, and maintenance of the Saturday night 12 o'clock closing law here.

They also urged renewal of the Dies Committee, which automatically ceased its official life January 3 and as yet has not been continued by House resolution. Its investigations are urgently needed at this time, Delegate Harry N. Stull commented.

Conference officers for the coming year, elected last night, were: President, Fred W. Gast, reelected to his second term; first vice president, Dr. Victor Myers; second vice president, Jesse C. Sutter; third vice president, Dr. C. P. Martin; fourth vice president, O. M. Kile, and secretary-treasurer, J. L. Bennett, reelected to his seventh term.

A resolution urging the widening of Queens Chapel Road from Michigan Avenue Northeast to the District line was forwarded to Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, head of the District Highway Department, for a report at the next meeting at the suggestion of Montgomery Delegate Washington I. Cleveland.

Judge Donald A. Delashmut, of the Rockville, Md., Police Court, was introduced by Cleveland as a new delegate to the conference.

Stull, who is head of the Federation of Citizens Associations in the District, reported that the federation's next meeting February 1 will be devoted entirely to the special report of the laws committee on liquor questions here.

Cathedral-Cleveland

The Cathedral Heights-Cleveland Park Citizens Association last night opposed the closing of Virginia Avenue between Nineteenth Street and Constitution Avenue Northwest on the grounds it would block a main artery of traffic between the north-west residential area and the downtown section.

Closing of the avenue was suggested as a means of expansion for the PanAmerican Union, it was said at the meeting.

The association joined other civic groups which have endorsed the plan for a cross-town bus line joining the Northwest and Northeast sections of the city.

Petworth

Opening of all public schools at 9:30 a. m., instead of 9 a. m., was proposed last night by the Petworth Citizens Association as a move to relieve traffic congestion.

The association, meeting at Petworth Library, George Avenue and Usher Street Northwest, reiterated its support of cross town bus service between the Northeast and Northwest sections. The Military Road and Concord Avenue route was preferred. A committee was named to assist Police Chief Brown in the forthcoming campaign for funds for the Police Boys Clubs. Members are Abner Rose, Thomas R. Manning, Frank Yilek, L. F. Suit and R. T. Haugh.

A color motion picture, "People Come First," was shown by Robert Dougan.

Four Are Treated For Food Poisoning

Two men and two women who reported suffering ill effects after eating hand sandwiches for lunch, were treated for poisoning at Casualty Hospital yesterday.

Robert Howdershille, 31, of 2627 Adams Mill Road, and Stanley Everhart, 40, of Bethesda, were admitted at the hospital. Mr. Howdershille, 24, and Jeanne Burrell, 21, of 1428 Perry Place Northwest, were released after treatment. The four reported lunching together yesterday at a restaurant near their New York Avenue place of work.

Poundmaster Perplexed . . .

HE HAS 19 MORE TALES OF WOE—Poundmaster Frank Marks holds the smallest of 19 dogs turned over to him yesterday by the United States marshal's office. Marshals evicted a woman from a residence in the 1500 block of Newton Street Northwest and found that she had 19 canine pets. This placed the officers in the doghouse, so to speak, and they turned to Marks for the solution, dropped the problems in his lap. Now Marks is in a quandary, but as several of the dogs are full-blooded, the poundmaster feels certain some will be adopted before the 48-hour deadline.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Howard University School of Music presents Alton Jones in a piano recital Tuesday night in Andrew Rankin Memorial Chapel.

Program: Andante Variations in F minor (Haydn), Nocturne in E minor, Rondo in E flat major (Field), Sonata in B flat minor (Chopin), Prelude in A minor (Debussy), Preludes in D major and C major (Rachmaninov), The Island Spell (Ireland), Ein Marchen (Medtner), Islamei (Balakirev).

Third to appear this season in Howard University's artists' series, Alton Jones gave a piano recital last evening in Andrew Rankin Chapel.

Playing the program he used last month in Town Hall, New York, his choice of compositions veered between the readily recognizable and the recondite. He began with Chopin's nocturne and ended with the brilliant "Islamei" fantasia of Balakirev. Other familiar items were Chopin's B flat minor sonata; Debussy's A minor prelude and Rachmaninov's C major prelude.

In the remainder of the recital he followed whims that gave his auditors some unusual and interesting music. He resurrected a nocturne and a rondo by John Field, the Dubliner whom fate transplanted from Ireland to Russia. It was Field who invented the nocturne form which Chopin improved, and he was a popular pianist who foreshadowed Chopin in the taste and elegance of his playing. The two pieces that Mr. Jones presented were excellent examples of salon style.

From the music of living composers he picked out Rachmaninov's seldom-heard D major prelude, John Ireland's "The Island Spell" and one of Nikolai Medtner's charming "Fairy Tales."

Chamber Music Series Concluded

Chamber Music Guild String Quartet (Frank Gittelson, Alexander Lewis, Benjamin Sosner and Harry Goring) gave a concert Tuesday night in the Carlton Hotel. Program: Quartet in D major (Respighi), Quartet, Op. 21 (Jarecki).

Closing a series of four concerts in the Carlton Hotel last evening, the Chamber Music Guild String Quartet gave artistically sensitive and thoroughly enjoyable readings of two twentieth century works: The D major quartet of the late Ottorino Respighi and Tadeusz Jarecki's Opus 21. This was the first time that Frank Gittelson and his associates have devoted an entire program to modern music, but their season has been nicely divided between the old and the new. In previous concerts they balanced Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven and Dvorak against Frederick Jacobi and Darius Milhaud.

One congratulates these able musicians on the penetration with which they interpret modern idiom. Their confidence in this matter is notable, for it has a surety that results in exquisite phrasing and eloquent projection. Their technical skill is adjunct to their delicate handling of dissonance, and this delicacy is just the thing to clarify harmonic novelties for those who are learning to understand them.

Respighi's first quartet dates from 1907 and represents the stage in his development when he was making a transition in style, mingling procedures with radical experiments. It is an excellent example of what may be called modern romanticism, a musical parallel to free verse and imagism in poetry.

Tadeusz Jarecki, who was born in Poland in 1899, is now an American citizen. Compositions of his have been heard at the Coolidge Foundation concerts, but this was the first time that one of them had wandered down from Capital Hill.

We'd Frame Them, Too

The $1-a-year men around town are causing the Government a great deal of pain by refusing to cash their checks. The General Accounting Office principle is that these are not complete until every Treasury check comes back cashed and is filed in numerical order. But $1-a-year men, paid semi-annually, consider a 50-cent check from Uncle Sam something to frame.

Arlington Head Asks Underpass

Hanrahan Declares Project Is Needed On Ridge Road And Lee Boulevard

County Manager Frank C. Hanrahan said yesterday that County Planning Engineer Frank L. Dieter, County Engineer C. L. Kinnier and he had presented to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission a comprehensive plan recommending changes in roadways in vicinity of Fort Myer, on Columbia Pike near the new Navy building, and for a underpass at Lee Boulevard and Arlington Ridge Road.

Stressing the urgent need for the underpass, the county manager said it was most vital for properly handling traffic over the Lee Boulevard and for national defense in the possible movement of troops.

The underpass, he said, could be constructed for approximately $50,000 and be completed in about two weeks. There would be no difficulties regarding rights of way, he said, since the land is Government property.

Traffic studies carried on by the engineering department, Hanrahan said, reveals that 4,700 cars an hour are being handled at the traffic light at Lee Boulevard and Arlington Ridge Road.

The circle at the end of the Memorial Bridge, he pointed out, is being kept clear of traffic congestion at the cost of almost complete tie-up of traffic on Arlington Ridge Road.

The construction of the underpass will relieve all this congestion, Hanrahan asserted.

The National Capital Park and Planning Commission has given assurances that a conference with representatives of the commission and the Bureau of Public Roads with Arlington officials will be held at an early date, the county manager said.

Citizens Forum

The Citizens Forum of Columbia Heights last night urged the Alcohol Beverage Control Board to grant no more licenses or license renewals to grocery stores, restaurants or drug stores.

Meeting at the Powell Junior High School, the forum adopted other resolutions urging the enforcement of all existing traffic regulations and the adoption of a law forcing drivers of automobiles in serious accidents to submit to blood tests for intoxication.

The forum also asked Congress to grant the District local self-government immediately and initiate a Constitutional amendment giving national representation to Washington.

Fifteen new members were admitted at the meeting, which was opened with an invocation by the Rev. Paul Wilbur, of St. Stephen's and Incarnation Episcopal Church.

7th St. Business Men

John M. DeMarco was elected president of the Northern Seventh Street Businessmen's Association last night at a meeting held at 1316 Seventh Street Northwest.

Percy Solomon was elected first vice president; Leon J. Goldman, second vice president; Louis Ruden, secretary; A. F. Harlan, treasurer; Raymond Gittleman, general counsel, and John R. Perrine, sergeant at arms.

Elected to the executive committee were Bertram Wise, chairman; Louis Colman, Gilbert Lenke, Jack Salus and Max Chidell.

Gas Station Employee Robbed, Locked Up

Two men last night held up Gordon Aldridge, 21, of Alexandria, filling station attendant, at 424 Rhode Island Avenue Northeast, and escaped with $85 after locking Aldridge in a wash room.

3,525 Fans See Eagles Defeat Olympics, 4 to 2

Washington Runs Streak To 7 in Row

Pranschke Is Star Of D. C. Victory on Ice at Riverside; Invaders Quelled

By Jack Munhall

The Washington Eagles stretched their record winning streak to seven straight matches last night by defeating the suddenly peaceful Boston Olympics, 4-2, at Riverside Stadium in a carbon copy of their game here last Friday night.

By the same score and under similar circumstances—except for the absence of fighting—the Eagles delighted 3,525 paying patrons by easily licking their new-hates and increasing their Eastern Amateur League lead to three full games over the second-place Baltimore Orioles.

Franschke Is Hero

It was the Eagles' eighth consecutive match without loss at Riverside, and as Friday another new scoring hero popped up for Washington in the porky person of Gordon Franschke, who blasted in two long shots. "Rosy" Rossignol, with two goals, starred last Friday.

The match was ragged and highlighted by stellar goal tending by Les Colvin for Washington, and John Meoli for Boston. Meoli, recruited from the Boston Juniors to replace Vic Polich, who suffered a broken nose and other facial injuries last Saturday, made an impressive debut. Colvin had 27 saves, Meoli 29.

Eagles Take Lead

In an opening period that failed to produce a continuance of the extreme roughness that marked their match here last Friday, the Eagles took a 2-1 lead over the Olympics despite sloppy passing and a noticeable lack of coordination.

After several promising drives had bogged down in the mire of poor passes, Ross Knipfel scored the first point of the match as Yourkewicz, Boston's big "bully," languished in the mummy box. However, the fact that the Olympics were at subnormal strength did not subtract from Knipfel's goal, for he shot from just inside the blue line with a superb strike, close to his stick. The puck traveled like a black streak. Meoli, the young Boston goalie, blocked it with his chest but the disc spun crazily into the net.

This goal occurred at 8:44 and about three minutes later Boston deadlocked the count as Galloway, of Washington, sprawled on the ice where he fell blocking a previous shot. Fitzgerald, from in close, let fly a shot which Colvin stopped with a leg stretch and then shot his balance back into the net as the puck rebounded to the left. Thompson swooped in for the Olympics and pushed the puck into the unguarded net.

Franschke Scores

Franschke sent the Eagles ahead again, at 16:37, with the help of Courteau. Skating down the left side, Franschke and Courteau traded two passes and then Franschke shot while going at top speed from about 20 feet out and at a bad angle. Meoli never had a chance. You could hear the puck whistle all the way up in the stands.

The second period was for the most part, strewn with frustrated Washington shots. Goals Meoli's clever work in the goals plus speedy shooting by the Eagles. Boston to hold down the score. Each team tallied once and the Eagles left for intermission holding a 3-2 advantage.

Washington's marker was hung up by Burns at 15:04 after Meoli had blocked seemingly countless shots, notably by Burns, who was having a terrible time of it until he finally slipped one past the persistent Meoli. Norm's point was a typical Burns shot, high and hard and delivered from the center of the ice about 15 feet out.

Colvin Caught Napping

Boston, at 16:45, again caught Colvin "lying down" on the job and Belland whisked one into the unprotected cage on a pass from Thompson. A heated scuffle ensued previously had ensued close to the cage. With Colvin sliding around the ice on his stomach, Belland connected from close in.

The period was much rougher than the first, three penalties being called—two against Washington. Burrage, of all people, was called for cross-checking.

The Olympics gave Colvin plenty of cause to worry in the opening minutes of the final session, but Les weathered the storm of shots, and at 10:02 Washington took out insurance by increasing its lead to 4-2.

Pranschke recorded his second goal, a duplicate of his first, only this time Burrage instead of Courteau assisted him. Pranschke shot at a difficult angle from the left lane, falling as he let go of the puck and ending his journey shoulder first against the end boards.

Second-period scoring: 4. Washington—Burrage (unassisted), 11:30; Franschke (unassisted), 16:37; Washington—Franschke (unassisted), 16:37; Franschke (unassisted), 16:37; Franschke (unassisted), 16:37.

Renzo vs. Loughran

Jack Renzo, former Washington light-heavyweight, yesterday celebrated an anniversary. It was 20 years ago, on January 21, 1921, that Renzo, then fighting under the name of Young Ramsey, fought ten rounds with Tommy Loughran at the Ardmore Arena. Loughran won the decision. Renzo is now a chauffeur in the Department of Justice.

Ken Overlin Defeats Tony Cisco Easily

By Al Hailey.

Three advisers and slightly less than 1,000 sympathizers tried to tell Tony Cisco how to fight Middleweight Champion Ken Overlin last night at Turner's Arena, but the only thing that resulted was a ten-round workout for Kenneth.

Overlin, to put it mildly, gave Cisco a post-graduate course of instruction in the art of boxing and was rewarded with an unanimous decision over the Norritown, Pa. fighter.

It must have been a postgraduate course, for Cisco, once known as Tony Ciacco, appeared as though he should have graduated from the ranks of fighting some years ago—he fought just the kind of a battle Ken wanted him to.

Kenneth, sometimes known as "Congo Ken" because of his liking for places of light entertainment and refreshment, didn't lose a round. In fact, it's doubtful if Ken lost even a pound, despite the fact he looked a slight bit overweight.

Every time Ken worked himself into a lather, he merely danced backward and let the ever-charging Cisco bore in. Ken appeared to rather enjoy the wind from the punches that Cisco swung harmlessly by his head.

Cisco started out in the first round attacking with his left hand, but after several futile efforts with this punch, he began depending almost entirely on his right—which he looped and swung bolo fashion alternately in the fashion of Cefero Garcia.

But no matter how he threw it he could do no right. Ken either wasn't there or was blocking everything. Cisco's handlers led him to "keep boring in there, he's almost gone," and that's just the way Ken was every time Cisco bored in.

Cisco may find solace from the fact that he did land a hard right to Ken's left jaw in the eighth round and hit the "Congo Kid" three times on the jaw in the fourth. Both boys weighed 161.

Ken Opens Up

Cisco huffed and puffed his way through the early stages of the fight trying to get at Kenneth with the long, straight left, and he caught Ken twice in the first round, reddening Overlin's right cheek.

But "Congo Ken," as calm as if he were sipping an old-fashioned in his favorite cocktail lounge, bent Cisco double with a whistling left hook into the midsection, followed by a smashing right on Cisco's ear that did the Pennsylvania no good.

Cisco couldn't even get anywhere.

Frank Kovacs Beats McNeill For Net Crown

By the United Press

Orlando, Fla., Jan. 21.—Frank Kovacs, lanky Oakland, Calif. player, won his second straight tournament today by downing National Champion Don McNeill, of Oklahoma City, 6-2, 6-4, 6-0, for the Florida State championship.

McNeill and Frank Guernsey, Orlando, won the men's doubles title. They defeated Hal Surface, Kansas City, and Jack Kramer, Los Angeles, 7-3, 6-4, 7-9, 4-6, 6-3.

Kovacs took command of the match by breaking McNeill's service in the first game and never relinquished his control. The tall California star, who has turned from clowning for the galleries to concentrating on earnest tennis, unlooked an array of sizzling services and powerful volleys which routed the national champion in the third and final set of the match.

McNeill was finding Kovacs a jinx in the swing through the winter tournaments. Kovacs downed McNeill in the semifinals of the Dixie tournament in Tampa eight days ago and went on to win the championship with a victory over Eddie Alloo, California youth attending Rollins College, Winter Park, Fla.

Wilson Wins, 25-24, Raiders Score, 42-14

Surprising no one, but employing different methods, basketball teams of Woodrow Wilson and Western High took the huge hop from a deadlock for last place in the public school standings to another deadlock for third place yesterday in a pair of interhigh games.

Wilson, using the comeback system, eked out a 25-24 victory over Central at Roosevelt gym, and Western simply ground the Indians of Anacostia into the varnish of their home floor, 42-14.

Wilson Surprises

Usually a fast starter and snail-like finisher, Wilson's five reversed the order yesterday. It trailed after each of the first three periods, finally found the range soon after the start of the final session and had the Vikings doing the worrying toward the end.

It was a sneak shot under the basket by Eddie Polhamus, forward, that provided the Tigers their winning margin with two minutes of the game still left. The score then read Wilson, 25; Central, 22, and Lenny Citrenbaum's desperate 2-point shot with 15 seconds remaining could only cut the margin.

Cruel "Break"

The windup was perfectly legitimate, but a cruel "break" for the Vikings in the fourth quarter caused some speculation as to what might have been the outcome. Through a mistake of the official scorer, Sam Di Biasi, high-scoring center of the Mount Pleasanters, was waved out of action on four fouls. Other scorers had him down for only three instead of four personal fouls, but the decision stood.

With Di Biasi off his trail, Don Hillock, Tiger center, made good on the charity shot allowed him and followed it up with two fast overhand baskets, giving Wilson a 25-19 edge. Zello Lago and Citrenbaum gnawed at that Central deficit, but Polhamus' final counter clinched it.

The first three periods, as dull as possible, were more Central than Wilson. In the first the Vikings ran up a 6-5 lead, and at intermission they were ahead, 12-7. Gradually Wilson came back to trail by only 14-13 after three quarters. With the start of the last eight minutes, Charley Klugman and Fuego brought the count back up to 17-13 Central, but then came the Tiger rally, led by Hillock.

Scores 13 Points.

In all the serious young cager, a first-year man, rang up 13 points in the winners' behalf. He led the floor play, too, except for flashes from Bob Bedell and Fred Vinson. Eddie Polhamus' nine points were second high.

With Di Biasi turning in one of his poorer performances, the Vikings' attack was led by Klugman and Citrenbaum. They tallied eight and seven points, respectively.

WASHINGTON, JAN. 22, 1941

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Wanted: One genius to untangle or at least make some sense out of the muddled middleweight situation that is festering the prize fight industry.

Currently, we have (1) a New York-California version of world middleweight champion; (2) a world middleweight champion, N. B. A. model; (3) an uncrowned middleweight champion; and (4) a two-time conqueror of the uncrowned. Any middleweight now campaigning who isn't some kind of a champion is no kind of a middleweight.

The man they accept as world champion in New York and California is Mr. Ken Overlin, who once upon a time outpointed Cefero Garcia, whose own claim to the title is dismembered in the antiquity of it.

The 36 States of the National Boxing Association proclaim that the middleweight champion of the world is their Mr. Tony Zale, who once knocked out Al Hostak. Up to that point, Hostak was the N. B. A. champ.

But there is a young man now campaigning who within the past year has gained decisions over both Overlin and Zale and still has no sort of a formal title to show for his efforts. He is Billy Soose, of Farrell, Pa., who licked them both in non-title bouts and seemingly can't get another fight with either one.

However, this is no time to go overboard for Soose as the uncrowned champion of the middleweight class, because Soose's record is not exactly unblemished. Soose couldn't lick Washington's George Abrams in two attempts, losing the decision in each battle, which fact promotes Abrams to some sort of a title as champion of the uncrowned champion.

The man holding the key to the middleweight muddle is a dark complected little fellow named Chris Dundee, who happens to be the manager of both Overlin and Abrams. Dundee thus holds a strong hand. He has offered to match his own fighter against either Soose or Zale, but is showing no inclination to let his other man, Overlin, go into the ring with either one. That state of affairs is causing the managers of Zale and Soose to bleat in chorus something after this fashion:

"We don't want to fight Abrams. We want Overlin. Dundee is trying to police Overlin's middleweight bout by showing Abrams at us." That is probably very true and labels Mr. Dundee as a rather smart fellow. If his man Abrams disposes of Soose, whom he has already beaten once, that is one threat to Overlin's title removed without risk to Overlin. And if, perchance, Dundee can maneuver Zale into a fight with Abrams and Abrams wins Zale's title, then Dundee will have both the N. B. A. and New York champions in his stable.

In defense of Overlin it must be noted that when he licked Garcia to gain the New York-California version of the title he was beating probably the best middleweight extant. And it also must be noted that when Overlin dropped the decision to Soose, it was universally hailed as one of those "Scranton" decisions.

The "Scranton decision" has become famous in the prize ring industry. It is a decision that seems to adhere to Pennsylvania fighters, no matter what the calibre of their opposition. Pete Latzo won one of those Scranton decisions from Mickey Walker once upon a time despite the fact that Walker hit him with everything except the facade of City Hall.

Hovering around the fringe of the middleweight mess is another character who is trying to lay his hands on the title. He is promoter Mike Jacobs who has his own candidate for the title. Jacobs' man is Sieve Belloise. He has Belloise under contract and not long ago Jacobs envisioned Belloise as a champion when he put Overlin on the floor in an early round. But Jacobs' plans mislaid fire when Overlin dusted off the seat of his pants and proceeded to outpoint Belloise the rest of the way to retain his title.

What Jacobs saw in that bout, though, intrigued him and he rematched Belloise with Overlin, who was supposed to be slipping. Belloise actually entered the ring the favorite to beat Overlin in that second title bout, but it was an agonizing evening for Jacobs who again saw his contemplated coronation of Belloise foiled. The crafty Overlin gave Belloise a consummate boxing lesson in that second bout.

However, as Jacobs' man, Belloise is in good hands and will doubtless get the first shot at Zale that presents itself. The New York promoter has a good idea of what he is doing. Meanwhile though, it is a very messy state of affairs, although I don't know why this department should get so excited about other people's troubles.

Cards, Hoyas to Face Brewers Five Sunday

Georgetown and Catholic Universities will provide the opposition Sunday night when the Washington Brewers are met in a basketball game at Riverside Stadium, 8:45 o'clock, that is to donate all of its profits to the President's Emergency Fund for the relief of infantile paralysis.

These schools agreed to alternate against the Brewers yesterday after George Washington and Maryland Universities refused.

Both the Catholics and Terrapins cited school policies against athletic competition on Sunday as the main reason for their inability to compete.

Max Farrington, athletic director at George Washington, disclosed that examinations starting today and extending through next Saturday influenced the decision. He added that George Washington plans a continuance of its annual policy whereby the Catholics will set aside one of their games for the paralysis fund.

Go news was received when it was announced that Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School's basketball team had accepted an invitation to play St. John's, its traditional rival, in a 7:30 o'clock preliminary.

The Bethesdaans not only boast fine representation, but also are sparked by seven red-haired cheer leaders who will be beating down in an effort to root their school to victory over the clever Cadets.

The schoolboy rivals have played many outstanding games before large crowds within the past few years and are expected to produce fine basketball for this occasion.

Both Farrington, of George Washington, and Geary Eppley, athletic director at St. John's, endorsed Sunday night's game as a fine idea despite the inability of their schools to compete. So did Staff Cassell, American University's athletic director.

"Undoubtedly many of our fans and students will turn out for the game," Farrington declared, "and we consider it a fine attraction. I believe it will prove an unqualified success and wish it the best of luck."

"We not only have a policy against Sunday basketball, but also are making a road trip over the week-end of January 28," Eppley declared. "I feel reasonably certain, however, that the game will be well supported and will help create new interest in basketball."

Cassell added that American University, in declining the invitation, had considered every viewpoint and had regretfully abandoned participation in the game.

"I need not emphasize how much we would like to have played, because I've made that clear already," he declared yesterday, "but I would like to say that I believe it will go over in a big way."

Georgetown, ranked second in the East and fifth in the Nation in a recent poll, will be out to make its best possible showing in a game that will be played under collegiate rules and handled by officials approved by the competing college clubs, the Hoyas and Cardinals.

Bill Bornheimer, center; Jim Giebel and George Pajak, forwards, and Capt. Irving Rizzi, steady guard, are some of the stars upon whom the Hoyas will bank mightily. Catholic U. will depend largely upon the individual efforts of two former local schoolboy stars, namely, Jim Mulvihill, St. John's, and Gene Daly, Western.

Master Key Is Beaten 2 Lengths

Victor Shows Speed In Tune-up for Miami Beach Cap; Maeda Takes Show

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 21.—Finding the velvety softness of the turf course greatly to his liking, Topes, a $58 for $2 shot in the field of 11, raced to a two-length victory in the Tanager Purse of a mile and a sixteenth before 10,000 fans here this afternoon. The Tallyho Stable's 5-year-old, recently far back in similar company on a muddy main track, ran over horses in the stretch, finishing the journey in 1:47.5. R. A. Dario's Master Key was second by a length, while Maeda, from the Maema Farm, annexed the show. One Jew, the favorite, never was a vital factor. The race served as a trial for Saturday's $5,000 Miami Beach Handicap, the only stake in the country decided on the grass. All today's feature sold well. Mrs. M. Maeda and Harp Weaver are eligible for that stake.

Frances Keene tried to make a runaway affair of the Tanager. The lightly weighted filly jumped right to the front and was four lengths on top before the others had fairly found their strides. Master Key and Maeda alternated in trying to move up on the leader. Once the field turned for home, it was Topes, which had reserved not too far away, which had the most speed for the run. Mrs. Maeda's long shot picked up the several horses in front of him and won going away. Dario made up many lengths to be a creditable fifth.

SEC Authority Is Challenged By Big Board

By the Associated Press

In its first full test of the authority of the Securities Commission over exchanges, the New York Stock Exchange asserted yesterday that its life was threatened by a proposed order to rescind its prohibition against so-called multiple trading.

Representatives of regional exchanges, led by the Boston organization, lined up behind the SEC in an attack on the rule. The rule would prohibit a member of the New York Stock Exchange, who also is a member of a regional exchange, from trading elsewhere than on the New York floor when acting for himself, except in securities not listed in New York. The member could trade on the regional exchange when acting for a customer, however.

Authority Challenged

Timothy Pfeiffer, counsel for the New York Exchange, asserted that the proposed order threatened the existence of the exchange. He also challenged the commission's authority to take such a step.

The order for the hearing was issued under section 19 (b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 which empowers the SEC "for the protection of investors or to insure fair dealing." The subsection specifies 12 items and "similar matters" under which the SEC may act.

"Plainly," Pfeiffer said, "neither fair dealing in securities traded in the New York Stock Exchange nor the fair administration of that exchange is involved."

"Side Door" Cited

The multiple trading method, he added, amounted to a member making available "a side door to the floor of the New York Stock Exchange without the payment of commissions."

Such special privileges for a small minority, he said, would inevitably lead others to seek "compensating avoidance" of the exchange rules with the ultimate "deterioration of the whole fabric upon which the New York Stock Exchange now rests."

Seek to Build Trade

John E. Yerxa, president of the Boston exchange, testified that enforcement of the rule would reduce by at least 25 per cent the number of issues traded on the Boston exchange because it would force withdrawal of 11 odd-lot dealers who were financed by New York exchange members.

Yerxa said that the Boston exchange had tried to find a way to finance odd-lot dealers on the Boston exchange by "book" for issues which might be dropped by such withdrawal, but that it had been unable to find any way except through New York members who would profit by the business they would get through the Boston exchange.

During cross-examination by Pfeiffer, Yerxa said that the number of local companies which listed securities on the Boston board was relatively small because they could get better prices off the exchange than on it and also because of regulatory provisions which many wished to avoid. He added that the exchange had been trying to build up interest in listing among local companies, however.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Jan. 21 (AP)—Wheat futures prices were down today, but the weight of an indifferent demand, continued bright prospects for the growing winter crop, and the fact that the general weakness of surrounding markets, particularly in the West, had been somewhat relieved by the day with net losses of 3 to 5 cents under the previous close.

Final wheat prices were 1/4 to 1 cent under Monday's, while 3/4 to 1 1/2 cents for 1940-41, 1941-42, 1942-43, 1943-44, 1944-45, 1945-46, 1946-47, 1947-48, 1948-49, 1949-50, 1950-51, 1951-52, 1952-53, The most famous "name" bands of the country are guests each week on "Your Hit Parade" under the patriotic new plan in which part of the program originates at different military training camps. You've already heard Eddie Duchin's when the "Hit Parade Party" was held at Fort Myer two weeks ago. You heard Tommy Dorsey and his orchestra when it was given at Quantico last week. This week it's to be Charlie Barnet's musical crew when it comes from Fort Dix in New Jersey. Jack Teagarden's Orchestra is to be presented over the airwaves when the "party" is held the following week at the Naval Training Station at Newport, R. I. The next week it will be Ozzie Nelson from Fort Devens in Massachusetts. Then Tommy Tucker's when it comes from nearby Fort Meade on February 15. Sammy Kaye will play at the Naval Academy on the 22d, and Jan Savitt at Fort Hamilton on Long Island on March 1.

The broadcast portion of the "party" is only a small part of the entertainment provided by "Your Hit Parade" sponsors for the boys in training. Only two selections from the top tunes of the week are played by the guest orchestras on the Nation-wide air, but the entertainment at the various camps lasts a full three hours. Jerry Lester serves as comedian and master of ceremonies. Florida Vestoff dances. Dean Janis sings.

RECORD BREAKING REVUES. In recognition of Inaugural Week, the night spots have outdone themselves in presenting large and star-studded revues. In talent, size and glitter the current floor shows slack up to an unprecedented record of entertainment value. Take every one of 'em in and you'll make no mistake.

Here they are:

SHOREHAM BLUE ROOM. Between the Roosevelt and Mrs. Roosevelt's new Viennese proteges, the Blue Room will be a prime place for celeb hunters this week. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., and party were in to hear Charlott warble "Springtime in the Air" on Monday eve and Mrs. Roosevelt is expected any minute. Charlott has sung at the White House, Hyde Park and over various radio networks. . . . Helen Reynolds' nine (count them) chaper skating girls, beautiful dancer Talia and the Music Hall Boys with their gay '30s songs round out a completely delightful revue.

LOTUS is now in the full swing of its "Thirteenth Anniversary Revue" and in its "Parade of the Nations" offers the most gorgeous spectacle we've seen for months. Balloons, Ethel Lynn, formerly of "Very Warm for May," is easily comparable to the famed Harriet Hoot. The Four Co-Eds, a crew of dynamo, stir up huge applause with high-tempo tap dancing and circus stunts. Athletics Goodrich ("Mr. America") and Nelson contribute thriller-dillers in acrobatics. Buddy Shamer forgot the lyrics of "One Rose" on Monday, but reaped more applause than most singers who don't forget. He's that kind of a guy.

TROKIA'S current revue is the finest in its history. Boye Heathen's rousing he-man songs fairly lift the customers out of their chairs. Patricia Prochnick warbles the new Manhattan ballads daintily. The dancing of Valya Valentynoff (6 feet 3 inches tall) is a study in virility and grace. Comedy for sophisticates is supplied by "Yanka and Tanka." Polished violinists by Sasha Lukas, brilliant and colorful Russian dances by Vanya and Lola, chorusing by the Trokia Gypsies.

CASINO ROYAL will present its new Chester Daugherty revue this evening as a special holiday special offering. There'll be smart novelty and parade numbers, acrobatic dancing by Roland and Reid Jack (Jive) Schaeffer's semi-shocker songs will add that riotous tang to the supper show.

Milton Herth's contest for Washington's singing basies is nearing its wind-up. The last of the preliminary auditions was held last night. Next Tuesday will witness the final show-down between the winners of the prelims. We have an intuition that a little dark-eyed canary will take the cake, meaning that enigmatic pianist and circus stunner, But you never can tell.

PIANO PICTURES. Watching Carmen Cavallaro's dexterous fingers fly over the Cosmos Room piano is a pet diversion of our town's young folks. The effect is heightened by the sunset pink lights and mirror over the keyboard. . . . The twin white pianos of Madrilion's room and Don also have keyboard mirrors. . . . Prize piano picture that offered by emcee Lee Everett.

NEPTUNE Room. "Slip and 'Sup" in Washington's most popular downtown rendezvous. Thrill to MILT HERTH'S "Horticulture" Trio. Also GENE ARCHER Vocals. Cocktail Supper.

SING A SONG WITH "MIKE." If you can SING, DANCE, PLAY AN INSTRUMENT—or want to see if you can, try your talents on the audience at Mike's.

of Restaurant 823 Fifteenth Street. Lee sits on the piano in his subdued moments, glances on it to exhort the customers to some sometimes reclines a la Cleopatra.

MATT WINDSOR, of the Anchor Room, recently played at the party given by Mrs. Sutherland Mayo for a group of departing Brisons, also of the "Father's Night" given at the new Randolph School.

BEGUILING BRUNETTES. Bonny Bonnie Baker, singer in the Mayflower Lounge, looks enough like band leader Dick Koons to be his sister. That seems to make them both good-looking. . . . Little Judy Clark who warbles with Ray Heatherton's orchestra in the Metro-nome Room, has one all-consuming ambition: she wants to meet President Roosevelt during her stay in Washington. . . . Helen Malcolm, who sings and novachords at the Silver Fox, has the cutest dimples. . . . Carmela Lazari, soprano of the Hi Hat, can carol almost any operatic number you'll give her. . . . Little Ariel, of El Patio, is a rarity in entertainers. She sings charmingly in the Mexican manner, also dances a fetching

BERT BERNATH, leader of the Pall Mall Room Orchestra

Did you every try to pick up an electric guitar? Don't. Bill Gibson of Paul Kahn's Mayfair group recently handed us his 10-string electric guitar and will certify it weighs somewhere between a short and long ton. It seems that the insides of electric guitars are full of magnets.

SHORT STORIES. That diverting voice you hear from the "March of Dimes" on Fourteenth Street belongs to Jean Cathon of La Salle Versailles. The other we heard Jean clear over on Fifteenth Street, claiming, "Ahead by a quarter! Ahead by a half!" . . . Jimmy Nichols of Pete Macias' band in Lounge Riviera is using his spare time to install air conditioning in his home and he expects to finish the job in about six months. . . . Waitresses at the recently burned Del Rio had one little bit of good luck. They were able to pick up work quickly as extra inaugural employees through the help of Del Rio's owner, Herbert Schaeffer. Some of them are now in Burt's Trans-Lux.

Clare's Famous Village will stage its first Thursday "Opportunity Night" tomorrow. If you are talented in any form of entertainment, go up and tell "Mayor" Clare about it. Remember, that's the way Kate Smith started.

SURE-FIRE HITS ONLY is the rule of Milton Davis, leader of the Rainbow Room. "I don't believe in playing every tune that comes out just because it's new," says Milt. "If we think a new tune is 'natural,' a sure-fire hit, we play it and not otherwise. We find that our patrons prefer the better tunes they know to a lot of experiments with new music."

BARBARA GRAY, who scored so finely at Kavook's Grill a couple of months ago, has returned from Baltimore. She's a versatile lady, does a pretty chore of emceeing as well as singing such "hot" nuggets as "Tuxedo Junction."

DOWN THE ROAD. Nightingale. A Gale fan writes to point out that Raffell brothers are an ornament to the Washington musical picture. There is Rodd, smart leader of the Nightingale band; Don, who is now with the Charlie Spivak orchestra; Leonard, who is business adviser to brothers Rodd and Don.

River Bend. George Stein's band really makes this popular spot play, especially when they play saxophonist Harry Echols' composition, "Two, Jump For Four." There's a Piggy Party tonight.

Baering Down On the News

By Arthur (Bugs) Baer

International News Service Staff Writer

Did you notice that Jack Garner gave the oath of office to Wallace and sort of handled him like he was a cornered rat?

Cactus Jack spent the last eight years of his political career dedicating postoffice. He can now go back to Texas and take a deep breath without waiting for somebody else to open the subject.

He is the first Vice President to take the job out of the doldrums. Of course, he had to do it pretty much like the Army carpenter who threw away three nails out of every five. When they asked him why he did that, he said, "The heads are on the wrong end."

Up until the time Cactus Jack got busy, a Vice President was just a book-end on a group picture.

Then Jack stepped up to the bat and demanded his three innings with the gavel. But after all, you can have too much of the same dish, and three times Vice President is too much like an acre of cream puffs.

I notice that the Senate was really sincere in its admiration of Cactus Jack, and I sort of am up for their sentiments this way. "They were sorry to see him go but glad he got away."

If Wallace does as well as Garner in the job, we are going to hear from him. In the next four years the Vice Presidency will be transferred from the Army to the Navy. There will be more launchings than dedications.

In the meantime, Jack, you can go back to Texas lakes and hook these rainbow trout. They may not be as big as good pond fish, but when you hook one you will be allowed to claim it.

Oakland, Md., Jan. 21 (AP)—The temperature skidded to 10 degrees below zero here today—a new low for 1941, but not for the winter. In December, the mercury dropped to 14 below one day.
